M'ADAM OF WATERHEAD.

M'ADAM, WILLIAM, of Ballochmorrie, co. Ayr, Surveyor-general of Turnpike Roads in England, s. his grandfather in 1836, and is the present representative of the ancient family of M'Adam of Waterhead, and chief of the name.

Lineage.

The M'Adams of Waterhead, in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, are descended and derive their name from GREGOR M'GREGOR, chief of clan Gregor: whose second son, Gregor, captain of the clan, together with his cousin, (from whom spring the Griersons, or Gregorsons of Lagg,) fled to the south country, in consequence of an edict of fire and sword issued against the clan for a raid upon the M'Nabs. After committing various acts of hostility upon the English border, and occasionally in his own country, Gregor was taken and executed in Edinburgh. His son,

ADAM M'GREGOR, being compelled to change his name, called himself ADAM M'ADAM.

Some writers assert that all the M'Adams and Adams in Scotland are derived from Duncan Adam, who lived in the time of ROBERT THE BRUCE; and support their assertion by the alleged similarity of their armorial bearings. The total difference of the arms of the M'Adams of Waterhead and those of the Adams will be best shewn by comparison. ADAM—Argent, a mullet, azure, pierced, of the field, between three cross-crosslets, fitchy, gules. M'ADAM OF WATERHEAD—Vert, an arrow, paleways, barbed and feathered, argent.

The arms and the crest of the M'Adams of Waterhead are traditionally said to be derived from the circumstance of an ancestor of M'Gregor's having saved the king's life by shooting a stag when driven to bay. This story is also claimed, with some variation, by the elder branch of the M'Gregors, and by the Seaforths; but the evidence of arms seems more in favour of the M'Adams of Waterhead, who would otherwise have borne something more resembling the very ancient shield of the clan Gregor, namely, argent, a pine tree, eradicated, proper.

JOHN M'ADAM, son of the above-mentioned Adam M'Gregor, continued to live at Waterhead, without possessing it, till his son,

ANDREW M'ADAM, on the 31 July, 1569, obtained a charter of the lands at Perth from JAMES VI., by the hands of the regent Murray. This Andrew had (with a dau., Ellinor, maternal ancestor of the Cunninghams of Caprington, in Ayrshire) a son and heir,

QUINTIN M'ADAM, who was twice summoned to Parliament in 1581, and was s. by his son,

GILBERT M'ADAM, served heir to his father in the lands of Waterhead, 5 Feb. 1591. Thirty years afterwards we find his son,

WILLIAM M'ADAM served heir. He was summoned as "Bailie," together with other barons of the stewartry, to form a committee for the defence of the country in case of war, A.D. 1648; his brothers, John and Christian M'Adam, are spoken of by the celebrated John Livingston in a letter dated 1626, as "worth and experienced Christians rendering him much assistance in his wanderings." Mr. M'Adam m. Bessie Fullarton, and was s. by his son,

GILBERT M'ADAM, who was served heir to his father 2 Aug. 1662. This gentleman was a strenuous supporter of the reformed religion in Scotland, and consequently became involved in the political disputes of that time. He was tried and banished the country for harbouring the famous John Welsh and other leaders of the insurrection who fled from Bothwell field. Having been ransomed by his father-in-law, James Dun of Benwhatt (who was afterwards shot by Claverhouse), he returned, and whilst at prayer in a cottage, in the village of Kirkmichael, co. Ayr, was surprised and shot by a party of soldiers under the command of the lairds of Colzean and Ballochmyer, A.D. 1680. A stone was erected at the time to commemorate the event; and the names of the two leaders having been subsequently erased from it, were restored by the hands of Old Mortality, whose singular occupation is recorded in the pages of Sir Walter Scott. This ancient stone is now inserted into a neat monument in the churchyard of Kirkmichael. Gilbert M'Adam m. a dau. of James Dun of Benwhatt, and had a son and successor,

JAMES M'ADAM, who was served heir in 1686. He m. a lady of the Cunningham family, and appears to have d. in 1687. He inherited his father's regard for religious freedom, as on the reverse side of his tombstone, in the family burying ground at Carsphairn, are found the following lines:—

> "Reader, behold in death so cold
> Two Waterheads here ly;
> Who in our night yt. give us light
> Truth's champions in their day,
> Protectors brave lo here yr. grave
> In . . . . . of day
> With saints do sing for ay."

His life also was attempted by Crawfurd of Camlarg, and Crawfurd of Boreland, who followed him along the road, and missing him in the dusk of the evening, overtook and shot Roger Dun, his uncle, in mistake for the laird. The tombstone of the murdered man lies beside that of the intended victim. This James was s. by his son,

JAMES M'ADAM, who m. Janet Craufurd, (of the Loudon family,) by whom he had

JAMES M'ADAM, his heir, who m. late in life, A.D. 1715, Margaret, dau. and heiress of John Reid of Mid Helliar co. Ayr, and had issue,

The second son,

JOHN LOUDON M'ADAM, celebrated for the reformation of the public roads of the kingdom, became, by the death of his elder brother, James, the representative of this ancient family, but did not inherit the estate of Waterhead, it having been disposed of by his father, and purchased by a younger branch of the family, the M'Adams of Craigingillian, whose dau. and heiress m. the Hon. Col. M'Adam Cathcart. Mr. M'Adam went to New York, in America, when only fourteen years of age, where his uncle had been settled for some time. There he realized a large fortune, and m. Gloriana-Margaretta Nicoll, dau. of William Nicoll, of Islip, Suffolk county, Long Island, America, lineally descended from Col. Nicoll, equerry to the Duke of York (JAMES II.) at the taking of New York. At the close of the American revolutionary war, in which Mr. M'Adam served as a loyal volunteer, he returned to Scotland, with the loss of nearly all his property. He purchased Sauchrie, in the county of Ayr, where he resided many years, being in the commission of the peace and a deputy-lieutenant. At the commencement of the war with France, he raised a volunteer corps of artillery, for the protection of the coast of Ayrshire, and received from GEORGE III. a commission as major. It was in the course of his active services as a magistrate and trustee of roads, that Mr. M'Adam's attention was first attracted to the want of scientific principle in the formation of roads. From that time to an advanced age this subject continued to occupy all the leisure of an active life, and the result was freely given to the country. Perhaps it is not generally known that Mr. M'Adam was in his sixtieth year when he commenced his public career as a "reformer of roads;" thus effecting a great national measure at a period of life which men of common minds devote to shelter and repose. In introducing his system of road-making throughout the United Kingdom, Mr. M'Adam expended several thousand pounds of his own private fortune. In 1825 he proved this expenditure before a committee of the House, when an equivalent sum was agreed upon, and an honorary sum of two thousand pounds voted, as a consideration for the benefit the public had derived from his labours, and the free gift of his invention. Although the inadequacy of this remuneration is very striking, and never was wholly paid, Mr. M'Adam was the last to complain of it; never having made money his object, but, on the contrary, rejecting, from principle, many opportunities of gathering wealth which were open to him, and refusing even honours when offered to him: he therefore died a poor, but, as he often expressed himself, "at least an honest man," in the year 1836, in the 81st year of his age. He had issue,

WILLIAM, his heir.
James, d. an infant.
James-Nicoll (Sir), knighted in 1834.
John-Loudon, m. Marianne, dau. of Joseph-Hellicar and Henrietta Gresley, and has issue, Charles-Loudon, Alice-Mary, and Selina-Henrietta.
Anne, m. to Capt. James Sanders, R.N. and C.B., and has issue, John-Loudon-James and Gloriana-Margaretta.
Gloriana-Margaretta, d. unm.
Georgina-Keith.

Mr. M'Adam was m. a second time, at an advanced age, to Miss De Lancy, by whom he had no issue. His eldest son,

WILLIAM M'ADAM, d. a few months before his father. He m. Jane, dau. of Capt. Pickard, of the 13th Light dragoons, and left issue,

WILLIAM, present representative of the family.
Christopher, who m. Ellen, dau. of Edward-Stephens Trelawney, Esq. of Coldrinnick, Cornwall, and has issue, Ellen-Jane, Agnes-Henrietta, and Emily-Darell.

MACALESTER OF LOUP AND KENNOX.

SOMERVILLE-MACALESTER, CHARLES, Esq. of Kennox, in Ayrshire, Chief of the Clan Alester, in Kintyre, b. 13 Jan. 1765; m. 28 March, 1792, Janet, dau. and heiress of William Somerville, Esq. of Kennox, by Lilias, his wife, dau. and co-heir of Gabriel Porterfield, Esq. of Hapland, and has

CHARLES, m. in 1828, Mary-Adeline Brabazon, only child of the late Edward Lyon, Esq. of Dublin, formerly an officer in the royal navy, by Anna-Catherine, his wife, dau. of George-Frederick Wynstanley, Esq. of Philipsburg, co. Dublin, and has issue,

Charles. Edward.
Anna-Catherine. Jessy. Mary.
James.
Williamina. Jane.

This gentleman, who is Lieutenant-Colonel-Commandant of the 1st regt. of Ayrshire Local Militia, and a deputy-lieutenant and justice of the peace, succeeded his father in 1796. The estate of Kennox was entailed by the late proprietor, and in terms of his settlement, the M'Alesters add the name and arms of Somerville to their own, and the designation of the present representative is, consequently, "Somerville-M'Alester, of Loup and Kennox."

Lineage.

The M'Alesters of Loup (now Somerville-M'Alester, of Loup and Kennox) are descended from ALEXANDER, stated to have been eldest son of Angus Mor, Lord of the Isles and Kintyre, A.D. 1284; and third in descent from Somerled, Thane of Argyle, the common ancestor of the clan Donald and clan Dugall.

Alexander acquired a considerable addition to his territories by marriage with one of the daughters and coheiresses of Ewen de Ergadia, the last of the male descendants of Dugall, the eldest son of Somerled, but having joined with the Lord of Lorn in opposition to the claims of Robert Bruce, he became involved in the ruin of that chief. After the battle of Lochow, and subsequent siege of Dunstaffnage, King Robert proceeded to crush Alexander of the Isles, and having pursued him to Castle Swen, his principal stronghold, forced him to surrender, and immediately imprisoned him in Dundonald Castle, where he died. His whole possessions were forfeited, and bestowed on his brother, Angus Og, who from the beginning had supported the cause of Bruce. From this circumstance, Alexander has been frequently supposed to have been the younger brother of Angus Og, but the M'Alesters maintain that he was the elder, and that, consequently, according to the Highland principles of clanship, they possess that "jus sanguinis," of which no forfeiture could deprive them, and are the representatives of the ancient Lords of the Isles, as heirs male of Donald, the grandson of Somerled, from whom came first the name Clan Donald.

The sons of Alexander, being driven from the Isles, sought refuge in Argyleshire, where their descendants acquired considerable possessions, situated in the districts of Knapdale and Kintyre, but appear to have remained tributary to the descendants of Angus Og, until the middle of the 15th century, when the chief asserted his independence; and on the final overthrow of the dynasty of the Isles in the reign of James IV., anno 1493, they were sufficiently numerous and powerful to form a separate clan, and maintained this position for upwards of a century, when, in common with most of their kindred tribes, their possessions were wrested from them by the Campbells.

The Earl of Argyle, being appointed King's Lieutenant, with power to lease out the entire lordship of the Isles, contrived to have the district of Kintyre ultimately included. But though they were thus forced to hold their lands of him, it would appear that the Macalesters did not always yield him military service; on the contrary, they were more frequently arrayed against him, and espoused the cause of the clan Ian Vohr, or M'Donalds of Isla, ultimately sharing the downfall of that unfortunate race, which in 1615 was nearly extirpated by the Campbells.

From this period, the clan Alester has gradually declined, but the chiefs still retained a considerable part of their possessions until the beginning of the 19th century.

Of the earlier descendants of Alexander little is known, and the first man of note amongst them appears to have been,

Eandubh, who, in the 15th century, fixed his residence at Ardpatrick, in South Knapdale, extended his influence and his territories, and, for several generations, his descendants retained the patronymic of Vic Eandubh. They had their burial-place at Iona, and Martin, in his account of the Western Isles at the end of the 17th century, mentions the tomb with the statue of Macalester of Loup in armour, formed of black marble, and as large as life. The next of the family on public record is

Charles, who was appointed Steward of Kintyre, A.D. 1481, as stated in the register of the Great Seal, X. 9. He was s. by his son,

Angus vic Eandubh, styled also Angus Macalester, of the Loup. He is mentioned in the register of the Privy Seal, A.D. 1515. He had issue,

I. Alexander, his heir.
II. Donald, appointed constable of the castle of Tarbert, on Lochfine side, which office continued hereditary in his family.
III. Roderick, who, in 1545, was Bishop of the Isles.

The eldest son,

Alexander Macalester, Laird of Loup, is mentioned in Pitcairn's "Criminal Trials" as having incurred the penalty of forfeiture for treasonably abiding from the army at Sullaway. From this forfeiture he obtained remission for himself and fifteen of his clan in 1540. He left a son,

Hector Macalester, who did not long survive his father, and was succeeded by his son,

Alexander Macalester, who, in 1573, obtained a precept of clare constat from Archibald, Earl of Argyle, wherein he is designated as Alexander M'Eachine, lawful son of the deceased Hector Macalester, of Loup. His name appears in the roll of landlords and baillies dwelling in the Highlands, who, in 1587, were, by act of parliament, called upon to find sureties for their good behaviour, and deliver hostages, whose lives were to be held responsible for the obedience of their chiefs. At his death, his son and successor,

Godfrey Macalester, was yet a minor. In 1591, he obtained a charter from Archibald, Earl of Argyle, and is therein styled Gorrie M'Eachine vic Alester vic Eandubh. At an early age, he became the hero of a tragedy, still remembered in the Highlands, the heads of which are to be found in Pitcairn's "Criminal Trials," to the following effect:—Enamoured of a lady resident in his neighbourhood, the young Godfrey sought her in marriage, and the damsel was not unwilling, but their union was opposed by the guardian or tutor of Loup, who, coveting her possessions, contrived, either by over-persuasion or force, to secure her hand and wealth for one of his own sons; but fearing the resentment of his ward, he removed to a distant part of the country, where he and his sons remained for some years, nor ventured back until such time as he thought the young chief might have forgotten his love and desire of vengeance. But in this he was most fatally mistaken. No sooner did Godfrey learn this resolution, than, collecting his followers, he met him on the way, and upbraided him with his base and treacherous conduct. Dirks were drawn, and a skirmish ensued, in which he killed his former guardian with his own hand, but the sons escaped and sought refuge with Angus M'Donald, chief of the clan Ian Vohr. Macalester, thirsting for revenge, but unable to cope with the powerful Laird of Dunyveg, had recourse for assistance to his son, Sir James M'Donald of Knockrinsay, who was then at variance with his father. Having learned that the sons of the tutor were with Angus M'Donald at his house of Askomull, in Kintyre, he and Sir James, with about three hundred of their armed retainers, surrounded the house in the dead of night, and on a refusal to surrender the refugees, set it on fire—and although aware that his father and mother were beneath the roof, Sir James refused to allow its being extinguished. Old Angus, somewhat scorched, attempted to escape in his shirt, but was captured, when the others surrendered, and were led off prisoners to Smerbie. For this outrage, being threatened with fire and sword by the government, the Laird of Lowip was obliged to withdraw himself for a time, and live in concealment; but Sir James having managed to procure letters of pardon from the king, he returned in time to take part in the deadly conflict which happened soon after at Lochgruinart, in Isla, between the M'Donalds and M'Leans, in which the latter were defeated, and their chief killed; many of the M'Donalds were likewise slain, and their leader, Sir James, dangerously wounded. Godfrey now attached himself to the fortunes of the clan Donald, of Isla, and continued for some time in little better than open rebellion; but after the capture of Sir James, in 1603, he made his peace with government, and appeared (together with Angus M'Donald, and other chiefs) before Lord Scone, Comptroller of Scotland, who, according to the record of the Privy Council, 8 Aug. 1605, was commissioned to repair to Kintyre to receive the obedience of the principal men of the clans in the South Isles, who were likewise required to find sureties for the payment of his majesty's rents, and exhibit their title-deeds. By these means he was enabled to retain those lands for which he had obtained charters from the Earl of Argyle, in 1591; but the greater part of his possessions, which had been held by himself and his ancestors by no better title than the sword, were forfeited to the crown. Not long after, Godfrey ended his turbulent career, and was interred at Iona, in the tomb of his ancestors. He was s. by his son,

Hector Macalester, who was a mere boy at the time of his father's death, and this circumstance accounts for his not having been engaged in any of the conflicts which about this period took place between the clan Ian Vor and the Campbells, but in which many of his clan took an active part. In 1615, two of his kinsmen, Alaster and Angus Macalester, together with Angus M'Donald, brother to Sir James, (who was still detained a prisoner,) were tried before the Privy Council for high treason. The charge preferred against them was for forcibly seizing on the castle of Dunyveg in Isla, then a royal garrison, and holding it out against his majesty's forces, under Sir Oliver Lambert, and being found guilty, they were condemned and executed at the Market-cross of Edinburgh, 8 July, 1615. In the previous year, Hector had obtained a precept of clare constat from Archibald, Earl of Argyle, for infefting him in the lands of Loup and others, and instrument of seazine following thereon, in which he is styled Hector M'Gorry vic Eachine vic Alister vic Eanduff. It is dated 17 Oct. 1617, and is recorded in particular register for Dumbarton, 1 Nov. According to the record of the privy council, 7 Dec. 1618, he was named as one of the twenty barons and gentlemen of the shire of Argyle who were made answerable for the good rule of the earldom during Argyle's absence. Unlike his father, he seems to have been a man of peace, although he lived in the stirring times of Montrose; but perhaps his position more than his inclination may have been the true cause of his inaction. Stripped as he was, of the greater part of the possessions of his ancestors, his power and spirit were crushed, by being forced to become a vassal of Argyle, who was the bitter enemy of the gallant marquess. Besides, by marriage he was connected with the Campbells, having espoused Margaret, dau. of Colin Campbell, of Kilberry: her brothers, Colin of Kilberry, Archibald of Glencarradale, and Duncan of Drumnimuckloch, are parties to the contract of marriage, which is dated at Clanshannoch, and registered at the burgh of Rothesay, 11 March, 1620. But if the chief was thus forced to remain at home, many of the clan joined the army of Montrose, and one of them particularly distinguished himself at the battle of Inverlochy. After the happy restoration of King CHARLES II., Hector Macalester, of Loup, is mentioned as one of the commissioners of supply for the shire of Argyle, in the first parliament held at Edinburgh, Jan. 1661; and his son and successor,

GODFREY MACALESTER, of Loup, is mentioned in like manner in an act of the convention of estates, held at Edinburgh, in July, 1678. He m. a dau. of Sir Robert Montgomerie, of Skelmorlie, (ancestor of the present Earl of Eglinton,) by whom he had issue,

ALEXANDER MACALESTER, who in 1698 obtained a precept of clare constat from Archibald, Earl of Argyle, infefting him as heir to his grandfather Hector. He was a good and loyal subject, supported the cause of King JAMES VII. to the last, was present at the battle of Killicranky, under Dundee, and afterwards joined the force commanded by Major-General Buchan, which was totally routed at Cromdale, 1 May, 1690; but having escaped the slaughter with a remnant of his followers, he passed over to Ireland, where he obtained a commission in Fairfax's regiment, and was present at the battle of the Boyne. In these wars he was faithfully attended by his foster-brother, Alexander Culikan, on whom he bestowed the property of Culdrionach, in Knapdale, which is still possessed by his descendants; and there is a tradition that this same Culikan, who afterwards went to Persia, was the grandfather of the celebrated conqueror, Kooli-Kan. He m. Grace, dau. of Sir James Campbell, of Auchinbreck, by whom he had issue,

I. HECTOR, his heir.
II. CHARLES, who s. his brother, and carried on the line of the family.
III. Duncan, who settled in Holland, where he m. in 1717, Johanna, dau. of Arnold Leuchenmaker, Burggraaf at Meurs. His eldest son, Robert, attained the rank of general in the Dutch service, and was commandant of the Scots brigade.
He left a numerous family besides, and his descendants are still settled in Holland.

HECTOR MACALESTER, s. his father, and obtained a precept of clare constat from John, Duke of Argyle, in 1726. He m. Isabell, dau. of Thomson, of Ballygabbin, co. Antrim, but dying without issue, was succeeded by his brother,

CHARLES MACALESTER, who m. Christina, dau. of Lamont, of Lamont, in Argyleshire, by whom he had two sons, ANGUS, his heir.

Archibald, who for many years commanded the 35th regt. He d. a lieut.-gen., leaving a large family. His eldest son, until recently, was lieut.-col. of the Ceylon rifle regt.

The elder son,

ANGUS MACALESTER, sold a considerable part of his inheritance, having involved himself by becoming security to a large amount. He m. his cousin, Jane, dau. of John M'Donald, of Ardnacroish, by Grace, his wife, dau. of Godfrey Macalester, of Loup: this lady was niece to M'Donald, of Kingsburgh, in Skye, and cousin to the celebrated Flora M'Donald. By her (who had been previously married, in 1753, to John Dun, by whom she had issue) Angus Macalester left at his decease, in 1796, one son and three daughters,

I. CHARLES, his heir.
I. Johanna, who m. John Macalister, of Balinakil, Argyleshire, and left issue,
1. Angus, his heir, who m. Frances Byng, dau. of Norman Macalister, late governor of Prince of Wales Island, by whom he had one dau.,

3. Robert, d. unm.
4. Mathew.
5. Grace, m. to William Burt.
6. Jane, m. to Dr. Catherwood.
II. Grace, m. to Alexander Alexander, of Boydstone, in Ayrshire, late major in the 4th regt., and left issue,
1. Archibald. 2. Jane. 3. Amelia.
III. Flora, m. to — M'Donald, but d. without issue.

MAC BRAIRE OF TWEEDHILL AND BROADMEADOWS.

MAC BRAIRE, JOHN-JOSEPH, Esq. of Tweedhill and Broadmeadows, co. Berwick, a magistrate and a deputy-lieut. for that shire, b. 3 June, 1801; m. 4 Aug. 1831, Caroline-Abigail, dau. of Benjamin Gott, Esq. of Armley House, Yorkshire, and had issue, an only son, JAMES, b. 12 May, 1832. He s. his father in 1832.

Lineage.

Since the middle of the last century, the present family has represented the Mac Brairs of Netherwood, frequently alluded to in old local histories, and described in books of heraldry, as "an ancient family in Dumfriesshire, who were supposed, originally, to have emigrated to the south of Scotland from the co. of Aberdeen, a Highland origin, which the name itself indicates.

The Netherwood family settled and possessed considerable landed property in Dumfriesshire, prior to the year 1400, which appears by family deeds and papers, as well as by the earlier records of that country; and besides their original estate on the river Neth, in the immediate vicinity of the town of Dumfries, different branches of the family were landowners in other parts of the country, and in Galloway, and the stewartry of Kirkcudbright. They appear to have intermarried with the Maxwells, Johnstons, and other families of distinction in the district, and to have long had great influence in the burgh of Dumfries, of which the head of the family was provost from time to time.

The estate of Netherwood descended in regular succession for many generations, down to the year 1740, when it was in the possession of Archibald Mac Braire, the last proprietor of the name, whose affairs becoming embarrassed, he was compelled to alienate the entire of the landed property which had been so long in his family, and shortly after that period, the direct line of the Netherwood family became extinct.

The present family are the immediate descendants of Robert, son of Thomas Mac Braire, of Newark, who was a younger brother of the laird of Netherwood, in the early part of the 16th century.

ROBERT MAC BRAIRE settled in Edinburgh as a merchant, about the year 1560, and he and his successors for four generations continued to reside there.

ROBERT MAC BRAIRE, (great-grandson of the above Robert,) eldest son of John Mac Braire, merchant and burgess in Edinburgh, settled in Glasgow, and m. 25 Nov. 1715, Margaret, eldest dau. of the Rev. John Pettigrew, minister of the parish of Meikle Govan, Renfrewshire, a well known personage as an author and wit of the day, and left issue, James; Robert; Thomas; JOHN, of whom presently; Charles; Robina; Marion; and Grizell.

JOHN MAC BRAIRE, Esq., the eldest surviving son, was a captain in the 91st foot, and was killed (28 May, 1798) at Enniscorthy, during the Irish rebellion. He left issue, with two daus., four sons, JAMES, Robert, Frederick, and Arthur. The eldest son,

JAMES MAC BRAIRE, settled as a merchant in the island of Newfoundland. In 1794-5, at the breaking out of the French revolutionary war, he quitted business, and having raised, at his own expense, above one hundred men for a fencible regiment, then forming for the defence of the North American colonies, joined it as captain, and served for several years. On his regiment being disbanded, at the peace of Amiens, he returned to Newfoundland, and afterwards was called upon to fill several important public situations in the town of St. John's. He finally, in 1817, retired to his native country, and soon afterwards purchased the estates of Tweedhill and Broadmeadows, both in Berwickshire, and was thus the means of restoring his family and name to the place which they had held for centuries amongst the landed proprietors in the south of Scotland. He m. 10 May, 1793, Elizabeth, only dau. of Joseph Bower, Esq., a merchant and broker in Bristol, son of James Bower, Esq., barrister-at-law, of the same city, and had an only surviving son, JOHN JOSEPH MAC BRAIRE, Esq. of Tweedhill and Broadmeadows.

MACARTNEY OF LISSANOURE CASTLE.

(See SUPPLEMENT.)

MACARTNEY OF BLACKET.

MACARTNEY, THE REV. WILLIAM-GEORGE, M.A., of Murlough, co. Down, s. his father in 1827.

Lineage.

The family of Macartney is stated by Playfair to have sprung from a younger son of the M'Carthy More, of the co. Cork, who went to Scotland to assist King ROBERT BRUCE in his wars, and was rewarded with a grant of land in Argyllshire, whereon are still to be seen the ruins of a castle, the ancient possession of Macartney, in that county. Subsequently, driven from their original resting place, the Macartneys fixed themselves in Galloway, in lands still called Macartney, and eventually became divided into three branches: Macartney of Leathes, Macartney of Blacket, and Macartney of Auchinleck. The second, that of Blacket, is the line from which the Macartneys of Murlough descend.

GEORGE MACARTNEY, Esq., (son of George Macartney, the last of the Macartneys of Blacket, who resided in Scotland,) settled at Belfast, in 1630. He m. Martha Davies, of the family of Sir John Davies, Knt., Attorney-General for Ireland temp. JAMES I., and had two sons,

I. GEORGE, who entered the army, and served with much credit under the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, and was high in the confidence of GEORGE I. He was, at the time of his death, lieut.-gen. in the army, commander-in-chief of the forces in Ireland, governor of Portsmouth, and col. of the carbineers. His issue is now extinct.
II. ISAAC.

The second son,

ISAAC MACARTNEY, Esq., possessed a large estate in the north of Ireland, and served as sheriff of the co. of Antrim, in 1690. He m. Anne, sister and co-heiress (with her sister, the wife of John Macdowal, of Freugh, and grandmother of Patrick Macdowal, Earl of Dumfries) of John Hartledge, Esq. of Dromore, Downshire, M.P. for Killeyleagh, and had issue,

GEORGE, high sheriff of Antrim, whose representative was the late Rev. Arthur Macartney.

  William, (Sir,) in holy orders, present baronet.
He m. 2ndly, in 1794, Catherine, dau. of the celebrated Hussey Burgh, lord chief baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, and previously M.P. for the University of Dublin. [Margaret, her sister, was created Baroness Oriel and Viscountess Ferrard.] By her he had issue an only son, Hussey-Burgh, and one dau., Catherine, widow of the Rev. Henry Brougham.

The elder son,

ARTHUR-CHICHESTER MACARTNEY, of Murlough, co. Down, king's counsel, m. Anna, dau. of Samuel Lindsay, Esq. of Turin Castle, co. Mayo, (see LINDSAY-BUCKNALL, of TURIN CASTLE, and LINDSAY, of HOLLYMOUNT,) and by her (who d. in 1841) had issue,

Mr. M'Carthy, who is in the commission of the peace for co. Cork, succeeded to the estates and representation of his family at the decease of his father, in 1823.

Lineage.

Few pedigrees in the British empire, if any, can be traced to a more remote or a more exalted source than that of the Celtic house of M'Carty; and, making every allowance for the exaggeration of Celtic descents generally, it cannot be contested that, when reduced to fair and admissible limits, they, as comprising the very oldest deducible family records, command a prominent, perhaps the most prominent, place in European genealogy. The most ancient existing families of France, of Spain, of England, do not venture to pursue their line beyond the barbarian chiefs who conquered their countries,—the Franks, the Visigoths, and Normans,—from the sixth* to the eleventh centuries. Of the English, many, as shewn in this and the other works of the authors', can prove contemporaneous origin with the Conquest in 1066, or even an anterior Saxon descent, but the pretensions of other nations to more remote antiquity are wholly untenable, because entirely unsubstantiated. The Montmorencys, who by general consent are placed at the head of the French haute noblesse, and who arrogate the title of "Premier Baron Chretien,"† rest this proud assumption upon no solid foundation. The first of the name distinguished in history, Bouchard le Barbu, or the Bearded, lived according to Hainaut, about the year 1028, and from that period until the close of the eighteenth century, when the Duke de Luxembourg, the last male representative of the second branch, died, no house in France was more illustrious in rank and achievement.‡ In a similar position, during nearly the same interval, were the Fitzgeralds, the Burkes, and the Butlers, in Ireland. The Abbé de Montgaillard, a most competent judge, thus speaks on the subject, (Histoire de France, tome i. p. 103:)

"Sans nul doute, la généalogie de la famille Bouchard où Montmorency est de toutes les généalogies Françaises, celle qui présente le plus d'illustration; mais elle ne remonte pas tout à fait à l'an 1000. . . Il n'y a pas même une seule famille Française dont la généalogie prouvée remonte jusqu'à l'usurpation de Hugues Capet (987). . . Les Montesquiou ont voulu démontrer qu'ils descendaient en ligne collatérale de Clovis, mais ils comptent à peine trois cents ans de noblesse." Previously to the revolution of 1789, the peers of France, including those of the blood royal and seven prelates, scarcely exceeded fifty in number. The eldest creation was that of Usez, conferred by Charles IX. in 1572, posterior, by nearly a century, to that of Norfolk, in England, (1483.) The great houses of La Tremouille, la Rochefoucault, Noialles, Richelieu, Villeroi, and many others, however illustrious for three or four hundred years, were not at all distinguished by great antiquity. This is fully established by the celebrated memorial of the parliament of Paris, in the minority of Louis XV.; a curious document, drawn up for the purpose of rebuking the overweening pretensions of the peerage, which are analyzed and reduced to their real value. The Tremouilles, although mentioned by Froissart in a preceding century, were little known before the reign of Charles VII. (1422-1460;) nor the Rochefoucaults, historically, prior to that of Francis I. in the following century. The others are still more modern. The chief of the Rohans derives through female descent, as do probably the present Montmorencys, and certainly the Richelieus. The family of Levi (Mirepoix) modestly claims kindred with the Virgin Mary; and the name would indicate a Jewish origin, of which, however, they would be little proud but for such an association. Many others, such as the Clermont-Tonnerre, La-Vaugayon, Cossé-Brissac, &c., were scarcely less absurd in their assumptions, as displayed in the memoirs of the Duc de Saint-Simon, no small portion of which, and they extend to twenty volumes, is devoted to this topic, without, however, impairing, in public estimation, a work preeminent among those productions of which France is so justly proud. The same tests might be applied, and similar results deduced, in reviewing the Spanish, Portuguese, Belgian, and German nobility. In Spain—of whose grandees it was arrogantly said, "Principibus prestant et regibus æquiparantur,"—none can trace beyond the tenth century, or before the reign of Ferdinand I.; it were more correct, probably, to name the times of Ferdinand III. and his son, Alphonso the Wise, two centuries later; nor in Portugal previous to Henry of Burgundy, who died in 1112; notwithstanding the allegations of the Medinas, Sidonia and Celi, (the former of whom glories in having given birth to St. Dominic,) the Arcos, the Albas, Infantados, Mendozas, Mellos, &c. The Portuguese proverb says, "Mello, con Don, et Menezes sin elle, Nas fazei caso delle." In Flanders and the Netherlands, the Arembergs, the Crois, Egmonts, Brederodes, &c., may be placed in the same class, and even in Germany, Witekind the Saxon, is the boundary of ancestral assumption. Guelph, the German patriarch of our royal family, lived in the eleventh century, but the private families of Germany can rarely trace so far back. In Italy, indeed, loftier pretensions appear sustainable, especially those of the patricians of Venice, amongst whom the Elletorali, or twelve families which elected the first Doge, in 709, enjoyed preeminent distinction, although in antiquity of descent less illustrious than those inscribed in the Book of Gold, at the founding of the city. Those, Voltaire deems entitled to the first grade in European nobility, ascending as they did to the fifth or sixth century. The houses of Massimi, Ursini, Frangipani, Colona, &c., at Rome, anteceded, perhaps, any in France, Spain, or Germany, but after strict investigation and poising the facts fairly in the balance of historical criticism, few of the continental nobility will be found superior in origin, if parallel to the O'Briens, the O'Neils, the

* Clovis d. in 511.

† The motto of the family is "Dieu aide au premier Chrétien."

‡ The direct line failed in 1632, when Henri (II.) Duc, Pair et Maréchal de Montmorency, was beheaded at Toulouse, and his immense inheritance passed to his sister, the Princesse de Condé, mother of the Grand Condé, of whose descendants it made, in the last century, next to the Orleans branch of the royal blood, (to whom it has lately devolved,) the largest proprietors in France. The house of Condé did not previously possess above one hundred thousand livres a year. "Il n'y a plus de Montmorency," says Montgaillard, "que du chef des femmes," the Luxembourg branch, a collateral one, which succeeded the main stock in 1632, having expired, as above, in or about 1790; but the present Montmorencys (Laval) do not admit this. In Ireland, the Lord Frankfort, and others of the name of Morres, have lately resumed their original name, as they allege, of Montmorency.

During nearly every reign from Philip I. (1060) the Montmorencys were constables of France, until that dignity was suppressed under Louis XIII. in 1627.

M'Cartys, the O'Connors of Ireland, whose progenitors were sovereign princes on the arrival of the English, in 1172. No epoch is better attested than the reign of BRIAN BOROIMHE, the conqueror of the Danes, at the decisive battle of Clontarf, 23 April, 1014. This monarch was coeval with HUGUES CAPET, which, without further retrogression (and many prior generations could be indisputably established), would place his descendants in a coincident line with the royal houses of Europe, of the greatest antiquity—even with the Bourbons, incontestably the oldest of all. Brian's posterity numerously and unquestionably exist, as do the representatives of the other Irish princes, whose claims are as demonstrable by reference to authenticated testimony as any historical event of the era.

The present proprietor of Carrignavar is the chief of his name, and representative of the eldest existing branch of the once sovereign house of the M'Cartys, the most illustrious, as Dr. O'Brien emphatically observes, of all those families whose names begin with MAC, and who at the period of the English invasion in 1172, swayed the sceptre of Cork and Desmond, or South Munster, as they had occasionally done of the whole province, from time immemorial. The M'Cartys trace their origin to HEBER, the eldest son of MILESIUS, King of Spain, through OILIOLL OLIUM, King of Munster, in the third century; but the first who bore the appellative of M'CARTY, or son of CARTAGH, was the grandfather of DIARMOD M'CARTY MORE, whom the English found in possession of Cork, and who swore fealty, gave hostages, and subjected his kingdom to HENRY II. (Sir James Ware's Annals, p. 7.) Diarmod was slain by Theobald Butler, founder of the house of Ormond, in 1186. His successors were, DONALD, CORMAC FIONN, DONALD ROE, DONALD OGE, and CORMAC, all of whom were distinguished as M'CARTY MORE, (or GREAT;) an adjunct continued in this senior branch until 1556, when DONALD M'CARTY MORE, the seventh in descent from the eldest son of the last mentioned Cormac, was created EARL OF GLENCARE, in Kerry,* on resigning his estates to Queen ELIZABETH, from whom he again received the investiture of them, "to hold of the crown of England in the English manner." This stock of the M'Carty More is extinct for more than a century; but the above Cormac More had a second son, DERMOD, first feudal lord of Muskerry, and founder of that potent house, who was killed by the O'Mahonys, in 1367. From him sprung in succession, as lords of Muskerry, TEIGE; CORMAC, who d. in 1374; TEIGE, in 1448; CORMAC LAIDHIR, (the Stout,) in 1494; CORMAC OGE LAIDHIR, who defeated the Earl of Desmond, at the battle of Morne Abbey, in 1521, and d. in 1536; TEIGE, who d. in 1565, as DERMOD d. in 1570. His son,

CORMAC, lord of Muskerry, a nobleman of great influence and power, could raise, as stated by Dr. Smith, a thousand men at a call. His residence was the castle of Blarney; in addition to which, he possessed the castles of Kilcrea and Macroom. He d. in 1616, leaving two sons,

I. CORMAC OGE, Lord of Muskerry, THE FIRST VISCOUNT, as stated by some writers. He d. in London, anno 1640, leaving (with a dau., Elena, wife of John Power, Esq., ancestor of Frances Power, wife of Richard Trench, Esq. of Garbally) a son,

DONALD, first EARL OF CLANCARTY, so created in 1658 or 1660. His lordship, who commanded the king's forces in Munster against Cromwell, m. the Lady Eleanor Butler, sister of James, first Duke of Ormond, and had, with two daus., three sons, viz.,

1. CHARLES, who lost his life in a sea fight against the Dutch, 3 June, 1665. He had m. Lady Margaret Burke, dau. of Ulick, Marquess of Clanrickarde, but d. v. p. and s. p.
2. CALLAGHAN, who s. his father as EARL OF CLANCARTY. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of the Earl of Kildare, and left a son and successor,

DONALD M'CARTY, EARL OF CLANCARTY, who forfeited the immense estates of the family, equivalent at this day to 200,000*l.* per annum, for his adhesion to King JAMES II. His lordship wedded Elizabeth, second dau. of Robert Spencer, Earl of Sunderland, and had two sons, whose male line is now EXTINCT, and one dau., Charlotte, m. to John West, 7th Lord De la Warr.

3. JUSTIN, created VISCOUNT MOUNT CASHELL, who m. the Lady Arabella Wentworth, second dau. of Thomas. the ill-fated Earl of Strafford, but d. s. p.

II. DONALD, or DANIEL.

The second son of Cormac,

DONALD or DANIEL M'CARTY, built the castle of Carrignavar, and founded the present family, thence so designated. He was s. by his son,

CHARLES (CORMAC) M'CARTY, Esq. of Carrignavar, who m. Catherine, dau. of David Roche, seventh Viscount Fermoy, and had a son,

DANIEL, who m. in 1683, Elizabeth, dau. of Toby Mathew, Esq. of Thurles, and widow of Pierce Butler, sixth Lord Cahir, by whom he left at his decease, in 1692, during the lifetime of his father, two sons,

CHARLES, successor to his grandfather.

Mary-Anne. Letitia. Hannah. Caroline.

This gentleman, who s. his father in 1804, claims to be chief of the clan of the Macauslanes of Glenduglas, in Dumbartonshire.

Lineage.

A Scottish writer, Buchanan of Aughmar, who published a work at Glasgow, in 1723, states that the founder of the Mac Auslanes in Scotland, was one BUEY ANSELAN, son of O'KYAN, king of Ulster, who (when the Danes, to avenge the massacre of Limerick, persecuted and destroyed numbers of the Irish) passed over to Scotland with a body of followers in or about the year 1016, and that the said Anselan, having given great assistance to MALCOLM II. in his wars, was rewarded by that king with grants of land of considerable value, and a splendid coat of arms. (The same monarch conferred about the same time similar grants upon the family of Keith, and several others.) Buchanan goes on to state that the territory so conferred was called the "lands of Buchanan;" but that the tradition is, that this Buey Anselan married an heiress of the name of Denniestoun, and in her right acquired those lands. He establishes the fact, however, that Anslan took up his abode there as "Buey Anselan, Dominus de Buchanan," and that his successors were all lairds of Buchanan. Of these feudal chiefs he gives a regular dynasty, beginning in the year 1016, with the said Anselan; the second laird, in 1060, he denominates JOHN MAC AUSLANE, and he proceeds until he extinguishes the line with the last of the lairds, John, who flourished in 1682, leaving an only dau. and heiress.

* The EARL OF CLENCARE, or GLENCARE, sat in the parliament held at Dublin, 26th April, 1584, but he soon resigned his title, which he considered a badge of servitude, and resumed the native distinction of M'CARTY MORE, in which, as he left no male issue, he was succeeded by his son-in-law, and chief of another branch of the name, SIR DONOGH M'CARTY Reagh, whose male line also expired with his grandson. The Earl of Kenmare, Mr. Herbert of Mucruss, and O'Donoghue of the Glyns, are the presumed representatives of this ancient sept in the female line.

Such is Buchanan's descent of the Buchanan family, the younger sons of the different lairds of which founded the numerous branches now bearing the name. His statements, however, concerning the branch which always adhered to the designation of MAC AUSLANE are not so clear. The first of those barons to be found, he says, is one MALCOLM, whose name was inserted as a witness to a charter, granted by Malcolm, Earl of Lennox, of the lands of Luss, to John, laird of Luss, about the year 1250, the signature to that charter being "Malcolm, Baron Mac Auslane." The next he mentions is one "Mac Beth, Baron Mac Auselane," of whom there are various traditional accounts as to his stature and uncommon strength. He lived about the year 1400. The third baron was Alexander, "last Baron Mac Auselane," whose only dau. m. one of the Campbells, after whose death she sold her inheritance to Sir Humphry Colquhoun, of Luss, her superior. Buchanan proceeds then to observe, "that the best account of the name of Mac Auselane are now settled in the counties of Tyrone and Derry, in the north of Ireland," and that those are descended from "the Baron Mac Auslane who went out of the parish of Luss about the latter period of the reign of King JAMES VI." From this baron the family before us claims descent.

BARON M'AUSLANE, of Glenduglas, came over to Ireland in the latter end of King JAMES I.'s reign, about the year 1600, and left two sons, ANDREW and John. Of the younger, the line is now extinct. The elder,

ANDREW M'AUSLANE, had a son,

ALEXANDER M'AUSLANE, who served in the army in Ireland before the year 1649, as appears by the auditor-general's accounts of the period, wherein the said Alexander is stated to be entitled to a share of the forfeited and debenture lands, and to a share of money as one of the adventurers and soldiers before the rebellion of 1641. He settled in the co. Tyrone, and was at his death possessed of the manors of Ardstrath, Mountfield, and others. He m. Genet, dau. of Edward Hall, Esq. of New Grange, in the co. In the parliament of 1695 he is entered on the rolls as "Oliverius Mac-Causland, Armiger;" and served the office of sheriff for the co. Tyrone in 1687. MAC DERMOT OF COOLAVIN.

MAC DERMOT, CHARLES-JOSEPH, of Coolavin, co. Sligo, styled PRINCE of COOLAVIN,* b. 4 June, 1790; m. Arabella-Maria O'Rourke, dau. of Hyacinth O'Rourke, representative of the ancient and once potent house of O'Rourke of Breffny, and has issue,

Charles-Borrombo-Molua.
Mary-Alharacta. Josephine-Elizabeth.
Victoria-Martha.

He s. his father in 1824, and is a magistrate of the co. Sligo.

Lineage.

The surname of Mac Dermot was assumed in the 11th century, and its representatives, until CROMWELL'S ruthless devastation, maintained a high position in the province of Connaught. In the 16th century the family had acquired a chieftaincy over the extensive districts of Moylurg, Artagh, Tirovil, and Clancahab, and in 1585 a recital of Mac Dermot's possessions was made under the Lord Deputy Perrot's administration, and recorded in the Rolls Office of Dublin. In the time of JAMES I. the Mac Dermots obtained a patent for their several estates, but in the subsequent reign they suffered, in common with the other Irish Catholic families, and their broad lands were seized on by CROMWELL, and partitioned among his soldiers. The patriarch of the race,

MURRYACH, surnamed MULLATHAN, who reigned over Connaught at the close of the 7th century, was ancestor of many powerful families, particularly of the O'CONORS,† who chiefly governed the province, the M'DERMOTS of Moylurg, the M'DONOUGHS of Corran, &c. The immediate progenitor of the house of which we are treating was

CONOR MAC DERMOT, the son of Dermot, who had a son,

TOMALLACH NA CARRIGE, that is, Timothy of the Rock, so called from the fortress he built on the island in Lough Key, near his chief mansion-house, named from the fortress, Port na carrige. From him lineally derived the Princes of Moylurg, whose representative,

BRIAN MAC DERMOT, son of Rhoderick, Chief of Moylurg, m. Sarah, dau. of O'Conor Sligo, and niece of O'Donel, Prince of Tyrconnel, and was father of

BRYAN MAC DERMOT, the younger, of Carrig Mac Dermot, (the family seat, now Rockingham, in the possession of Lord Lorton,) who m. Margaret Burke, of the house of Clanrickarde, and had two sons, TERENCE and CHARLES. The elder, by indenture dated 1640, assigned his entire estate to his brother,

CHARLES MAC DERMOT, styled Cathal Roe, or the Red, on receiving a competent maintenance and the payment of his debts. Cathal Roe, who became Chief of Moylurg, m. Eleanora, youngest dau. of William O'Mulloy, of Ughterhera, co. Roscommon, and was s. by his son,

HUGH MAC DERMOT, of Coolavin, who m. Elizabeth Kelly, of the family of Aughrim, and had a son and successor,

CHARLES MAC DERMOT, of Coolavin, who m. Catharine Dillon, of the family of Clonbrock, and was father of

MYLES MAC DERMOT, of Coolavin, who m. Bridget, dau. of Charles O'Conor, Esq. of Belanagar, by Catharine, his wife, dau. of John O'Fagan, and by her, who d. in 1777, had a son and heir,

HUGH MAC DERMOT, of Coolavin, who m. 16 July, 1793, Elizabeth-Frances, dau. of Dennis O'Conor, Esq. of Belanagar, by Catharine, his wife, dau. of Martin Browne, Esq. of Clonfad, co. Roscommon, and had issue,

Macdonald, Reginald-George, Captain and Chief (Capitanus seu Princeps) of Clanranald, b. in Aug. 1788; m. in April, 1812, Lady Caroline-Anne Edgcumbe, second dau. of Richard, second Earl of Mount Edgcumbe, and by her, who d. 10 April, 1824, has issue,

IV. Flora. V. Sarah-Anne.

Clanranald is a deputy-lieutenant for the co. Inverness.

Lineage.

To this line of the descendants of Somerlidd the same remarks apply as those that precede our account of Glengarry.

Allan Macdonald, son of Reginald Macdonald, and grandson of John, last King and Lord of the Isles, commanded his father's forces at the battle of Harlaw. He m. a dau. of John, last Lord of Lorn, and had three sons, I. Roderick, his heir; II. Allan of Knoydart, whose line continued for many generations, but being almost always engaged in rebellion against the Kings of Scotland, they gradually decreased in power, and were at last nearly extirpated by the Camerons; and III. John. The eldest son,

Roderick Macdonald, a turbulent chieftain, lived in the time of James I., and was conspicuous in the insurrections of the Earl of Ross and Donald Balloch, of Isla, Chief of the clan Ian Voir, whose daughter he married. By her he had two sons, Allan, his heir; and Hector, ancestor of the M'Eachan branch. Roderick Macdonald m. 2ndly, More, dau. of William M'Intosh, of Mackintosh. His elder son,

Allan Macdonald, the famed Allan M'Rory, distinguished alike for his bravery and military skill, m. Fleance, dau. of Donald Macdonald, of Ardnamurchan, and had four sons,

I. Ranald, his heir.
II. Alexander, who m. a dau. of Mackintosh, and had, with a dau., three sons, John, of whom presently; Farquhar; and Angus, whose only child m. Alexander Stewart, of Invernahyle.
III. Ranald-Oig, who d. in 1536, leaving an only child, Dugald, murdered in the island of Uist.
IV. Angus-Reoch.

The eldest son,

Ranald Macdonald, living in the reign of James IV., m. a dau. of Fraser, of Lovat, and dying in 1541, was s. by his only son,

Ranald Macdonald, designated Ranald Gald, who, with his grandfather, Lovat, was driven from his inheritance by a rising of the clan, which declared his cousin, John, the son of Alexander, and grandson of Allan M'Rory, chieftain. This insurrection led to the celebrated battle of Blairleine, fought between the Frasers and Macdonalds, in July, 1544, in which the former were defeated, and Lovat, together with his eldest son, Simon, and Ranald Macdonald himself, were slain. Ranald Gald never married, but left three natural sons, Allan, John, and Alexander, who received from the crown a charter of legitimation, 18 June, 1555. The victory of Blairleine secured the dignity of Chief to

John Macdonald, of Moydart, son, as above mentioned, (according to the "History of the Macdonalds of Clanranald,") of Alexander, and grandson of Allan M'Rory. This distinguished chieftain, who was Captain of Clanranald during the unsettled government of Queen Mary, acted a prominent part in the commotions of his time, and gained universal respect. He m. 1st, Mariatte M'Kane, and by her had five sons, Allan, his heir; John Oig, who d. unm.; Rory, who d. unm.; Angus, and Donald Gorme, who d. unm. He m. 2ndly, Penelope, second dau. of Sir Charles Erskine, third son of Alexander, Viscount of Fenton, and by her had a dau., m. to John Stewart, of Appin. Clanranald d. in 1584, and was s. by his son,

Allan Macdonald, Captain of Clanranald, who had been engaged in all the active operations of his father. He m. a dau. of Macleod of Harries, and had issue,

Angus, who d. s. p. and v. p.
Donald, heir to his father.
Ranald, of Benbecula, to whom John Macdonald, Capt. of Clanranald, granted a feu charter, dated 12 April, 1625. He m. 1st, Maria, sister of Sir Donald Macdonald of Slate, but by her had no issue; and 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of Angus Macdonald of Dunveg, by whom he had two sons. The younger, Angus-Oig, was ancestor of the families of Dalelea and Milton. The elder, Ranald-Oig, m. a dau. of M'Neill of Barra, and had by her a son, Donald, who s. to Clanranald. He m. 2ndly, in 1653, Ann, only dau. of John Macdonald of Clanranald, and had by her three sons, James, Donald-Oig, and Moir.
John, of Kinlochmoydart.
Margaret, m. to Donald-Macangus Macalister of Glencarry.

Clanranald d. in 1593, and was s. by his eldest son,

Sir Donald Macdonald, of Clanranald, who waged a fierce warfare against Mac Lean of Dowart, M'Kenzie of Kintail, and M'Neill of Barra, for which he eventually obtained a remission, 27 June, 1613. He subsequently went to Edinburgh, and was knighted by James VI. at Holyrood, in 1617. Sir Donald d. in 1619, leaving a son and successor,

John Macdonald, of Clanranald, who powerfully supported King Charles against the Covenanters, and gallantly fought under Montrose. He survived to witness the Restoration, and paid his respects to King Charles, on his landing in the shire of Moray, in 1660. He then retired to the Island of Uist, and d. at an advanced age, in the year 1670, leaving, by Moir, his wife, dau. of Mac Leod of Mac Leod, three daus., Moir, wife of Lauchlan Mac Lean of Coll; Catharine, m. to M'Neill of Barra; and Ann, m. to Ranald Mac Donald, of Benbecula, a son and successor,

Donald Macdonald, of Clanranald, who had served with his father in the memorable campaigns of Montrose. At Kilsyth, a gallant charge made by young Clanranald decided the victory, and after the ill-fated issue of Philliphaugh, Donald, stanch to his royal master, marched to Islay, against the Campbells. In 1648, at the head of a considerable force, he joined the Earl of Antrim, in Ireland, and was engaged in all the engagements in that kingdom, until the defeat of the king's army in the Queen's County, where he and Glengarry were taken prisoners. Clanranald m. Marion, dau. of John Mac Leod, of Mac Leod, and had, with a dau., Margaret, m. to Donald Macdonald, of Benbecula, two sons, Allan, his heir; and Ranald, successor to his brother. He d. in 1686, and was s. by his son,

Allan Macdonald, of Clanranald, who, firm to the cause of the Stuarts, summoned his clan in aid of Dundee, and, with his tutor, Macdonald of Benbecula, mainly contributed to the victory at Killiecrankie. It was at the head of the clan Ranald that Claverhouse received his mortal wound. When all hope of success for King

JAMES expired, young Clanranald refused to take the oaths to the new government, and retired with his brother, Ranald, to France, where he completed his education, and became one of the most accomplished gentlemen of his time. After residing some years at the Court of St. Germains, he obtained a commission under the Duke of Berwick, and in a foreign land, and in a foreign service, Clanranald preserved his name unsullied. When peace was restored, he went again to St. Germains, and thence returned to Scotland, and fixed his residence at Ormiclate House, in South Uist. In this, one of the remotest of the Western Isles, he hoped to enjoy rest and tranquillity, after the storms and vicissitudes of his early life. But the calm was of brief continuance. No sooner had the Earl of Mar raised his standard in 1715 than Clanranald hastened from Uist with his followers, and summoning his vassals of Arasaig and Moydart, joined the chevalier's army with a considerable force. In all the subsequent operations he took part, and at length sealed his devotion to the Stuart cause by his heroic death at Sheriffmuir. Clanranald was universally esteemed and respected by friend and foe, and his memory is still fondly cherished in the Highlands. He m. while in France, Penelope, dau. of Col. Mackenzie, Governor of Tangier under CHARLES II., but had no issue. His brother and heir,

RANALD MACDONALD, d. unm. at St. Germains, in 1725, when the succession devolved on his kinsman,

DONALD MACDONALD, of Benbecula, who was tutor of Allan Macdonald, of Clanranald, and had commanded the clan at Killiecrankie. He took no part in the insurrection of '15, but resided in retirement at Benbecula, until, at the decease of Ranald, he became chieftain, as nearest heir male. He m. 1st, Margaret, dau. of Donald Macdonald, of Clanranald, by whom he had a son, RANALD, his heir; and 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of George Mackenzie, Esq. of Kildun, by whom he had ALEXANDER, who obtained the estate of Boisdale, and Ann, wife of Lachlan M'Kinnon, of Strathuradale. Clanranald d. in 1730, and was s. by his son,

RANALD MACDONALD, of Clanranald, b. in 1692, who did not engage personally in the rising of '45, but remained in the island of Uist. He m. Margaret, dau. of William Macleod, of Bernera, and had two sons and one dau., viz., RANALD, his heir; Donald, an officer of high reputation in the British service, killed with General Wolfe at Quebec; and Margaret, who d. unm. The elder son,

RANALD MACDONALD, became, during his father's lifetime, in 1745, an able actor in the ill-fated proceedings which followed the appearance of CHARLES-EDWARD in Scotland; and of all the devoted adherents who ventured life and fortune in the cause, not one was more faithfully attached to the prince, or influenced by less interested motives, than Clanranald. He fought gallantly at Gladsmuir, marched with Prince Charles into England, and was severely wounded at Culloden. The issue of that battle extinguished the last spark of hope in the Stuart party, and Clanranald and the other chieftains were forced to conceal themselves, often with much difficulty, from the active search of the king's troops. Moidart afforded refuge to the young chieftain, and there he remained concealed until enabled to effect his escape to the Continent, where he joined Prince Charles at Paris, and obtaining military employment from the French government, became aide-de-camp to Marshal Saxe. During his absence, a bill of attainder passed against the chiefs who were engaged in the rising, but Clanranald's Christian name being, by an error, inserted as Donald, he succeeded, after some years' delay, in recovering his estates. He m. 1st, Mary, sister of the Earl of Selkirk, and by her, who d. 11 May, 1750, he had one son, Charles-James-Somerledd, who d. at Edinburgh, in 1755, aged five. He m. 2ndly, Flora Mackinnon, dau. of the ancient family of Mackinnon of that ilk, and by her had issue,

MACDONELL OF GLENGARRY.

MACDONELL, ÆNEAS-RANALDSON, of Glengarry and Inverie, b. 29 July, 1818; m. 18 Dec. 1833, Josephine, eldest dau. of William Bennet, Esq., and niece of the late Right Rev. William Bennet, D.D., Bishop of Cloyne, and has issue.

I. ALASTER. II. Æneas. III. Charles.

I. Marcelly. II. Eliza.

Glengarry s. his father in Jan. 1828.

Lineage.

The clan Macdonald, or Macdonell, is undoubtedly one of the most ancient in Scotland, and can, by incontrovertible evidence, be traced back to a period coeval with that of any family in the kingdom. The first of the race, of whom any authentic account exists, is SOMERLED, designed by Scottish historians Thane of Argyll, but by foreign authors and charters extant, King of the Isles, and Lord of Argyll and Kintyre. Among his descendants has long been disputed the chieftainship, and many and acrimonious have been the conflicts on the subject. We shall not attempt in this place to reconcile the contradictory statements of the rival claims, but in the line of descent confine ourselves as much as possible to that on which no difference can arise.

REGINALD MACDONELL, son of John Macdonell, Lord of the Isles, seventh in descent from Somerledd, received from his father a very large estate, as appears from a charter of confirmation by King ROBERT, dated 1 Jan. 1373. This Reginald is stated to have been murdered by the Earl of Ross in the Abbey of Elcho, at Perth, while heading the men of the Isles as their lawful chieftain. He left, with other issue, a son,

DONALD MACDONELL, of Glengarry, who was served heir to his father in the principal part of his fortune, and became a powerful baron. He left (with a younger son, Ranald, from whom descend many of the Macdonalds of Perthshire) an elder son and heir, JOHN MACDONELL, of Glengarry, who m. a dau. of Macleod of Lewes, and was father of ALASTAIR MACDONELL, of Glengarry, who m. the only dau. of Maclean of Dowart, and had three sons, JOHN, his heir; John (Ire), from whom many of the Macdonalds of the north are derived; and Æneas, from whom came the house of Shean. The eldest son and heir, JOHN MACDONELL, of Glengarry, m. a dau. of Lochiel, chief of the Camerons, and was father of ALEXANDER MACDONELL, of Glengarry, who m. Margaret, dau. of Celestine de Insulis, and heiress of her brother, Sir Donald Macdonell of the Isles, and granddau. and only representative of Alexander, second Earl of Ross. By this lady Alexander had an only son and heir, ÆNEAS MACDONELL, of Glengarry, who m. Janet, only dau. of Sir Hector M'Lean, of Dowart, by whom he left a son and heir,

DONALD MACDONELL, who m. 1st, a dau. of Grant of Fruchy; and 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of Allan Macdonell, of Muidert; and 3rdly, a dau. of Macdonnell of Keppoch. He had, with other issue,

ALASTAIR, his successor.
Donald, of Scothouse, who m. Mary, dau. of Sir James M'Donald, of Slate, and was s. by his eldest son,
REGINALD, of Scothouse, who m. Flora, dau. of Alexander Macleod, of Macleod, and had issue,

Archibald, of Barrisdale, from whom that line.

Donald lived to a great age, and dying in 1630 was s. by his eldest surviving son,

ALASTAIR MACDONELL, of Glengarry, who m. Jean, dau. of Allan Cameron, of Lochiel, and dying soon after his father, was s. by his son,

ÆNEAS MACDONELL, of Glengarry, a firm adherent to the interest of CHARLES I., for which he was forfeited by CROMWELL; immediately on the restoration, CHAS. II. created him for his loyalty a Peer of Scotland, as Lord Macdonell and Aross, by patent, dated 20 Dec. 1660. He m. Margaret, dau. of Sir Donald Macdonald, of Slate, Bart., but d. s. p. in 1680, when the peerage became extinct, and the estates devolved upon his kinsman,

ALASTAIR MACDONELL, son of Reginald of Scothouse, as before, who became of Glengarry. He was surnamed "The Black," and distinguished himself during the commotions of his time, under the Earl of Mar and Viscount Dundee. He was the bearer of the royal standard at the battle of Killiecrankie, and was created a Peer by the abdicated JAMES. He m. Mary, dau. of Kenneth, third Earl of Seaforth, and dying in 1724, was s. by his eldest son,

V. Henry-Robert.
VI. Somerlid.
I. Sophia-Elizabeth.
II. Louisa-Maxwell.
III. Elizabeth-Mary-Jane.

Capt. M'Dougall is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Argyllshire.

Lineage.

The M'Dougalls of Lorn were anciently Lords of Argyll "de Argadia," and are so designed in very early writs. Lorn was originally a petty kingdom, the residence of its king being the Castle of Dunolla. It subsequently became a lordship, and was often excepted from truces with England. At one time it included within its boundaries the west part of Athol, where Mam Lorn still preserves its name. About the beginning of the 12th century, Somerlid ruled in Argyll. By a dau. of Olaus, King of Man and the Isles, he had four sons, one of whom was,*

Dougal, who erected his inheritance into a principality. He was grandfather of Alexander M'Dougall, of Lorn, who fought and defeated King Robert Bruce, at the battle of Dalrie, in Perthshire, in 1306. His son, John M'Dougall, was s. by his son, Ewen M'Dougall, father of John M'Dougall, of Dunolly, whose son, John M'Dougall, of Dunolly, enters by charter from Argyll in 1535, and another in 1547. He was father of Dougal M'Dougall, of Dunolly, who entered to his lands by charter from Argyll in 1562 and 1567. His son, Duncan M'Dougall, of Dunolly, obtained a charter from King James IV., dated 8 Sept. 1598. He was s. by his son, Sir John M'Dougall, of Dunolly, who m. Margaret, dau. of Sir Duncan Campbell, of Glenurchy, and left a son and successor, Alexander M'Dougall, of Dunolly, who m. and had two sons, Duncan, who d. s. p.; and Allan, who s. his brother, and obtained from King James VII. a charter of the greater part of the lands of Lorn, dated at Windsor, 20 Sept. 1686, registered the 13th, and sealed 14 Aug. 1688. His son and heir, John M'Dougall, of Dunolly, joined the rising in 1715, and suffered forfeiture in consequence. He m. Mary, dau. of Sir James M'Donald, Bart. of Slate, by his wife, the Lady Margaret Douglas, second dau. of Robert, eighth Earl of Morton, and left two daus., the elder of whom m. John Maclean, of Lochbuy, and a son and successor, Alexander M'Dougall, of Dunolly, who was restored to his father's forfeited estate, by charter from the Duke of Argyll, in 1745. He m. Mary, dau. of Campbell, of Barcaldine, co. Argyll, and had issue,

I. John, who m. the Hon. Isabel Ruthven, second dau. of James, third Lord Ruthven, but had no issue. He d. at Bombay, 27 April, 1775.
II. Patrick, who s. his father.
III. Duncan, who m. Jane, dau. of Campbell of Duntroon Castle, co. Argyll, and had five sons and five daus.
IV Alexander.
I. Lucy, m. to M'Dowall, Esq. of Canonmills, near Edinburgh.
II. Mary, m to M'Niell of Oransay.

The second son,

Patrick M'Dougall, Esq. of Dunolly, s. his father. He m. in 1782, Louisa-Maxwell, dau. of John Campbell, Esq. of Achalader, in Perthshire, and had issue,

I. Alexander, capt. in the 5th regt. of foot, killed at the storming of Ciudad Rodrigo, Jan. 1812. He predeceased his father, and d. without issue.
II. John, now of Dunolly, present chief of this ancient and distinguished clan.

* Mr. Skene, the learned author of the "Highlanders of Scotland," derives the M'Dougalls from Reginald, the second son.

III. Patrick, lieut.-col. in the army.
IV. Allan.
I. Isabella, m. to Capt. Niell M'Dougall, of the 75th regt., Assistant Adjutant-General in the British army, killed at Castella, in Spain, 13 April, 1813, and has issue, Niel, and Louisa-Maxwell.

Crest—An arm in armour, embowed, fesseways, couped, ppr., holding a cross-crosslet, fitchée.
Motto—Vincere vel mori.
Seat—Dunolly Castle, co. Argyll.

 The original possessions of this family can now be scarcely defined; but from the known power of Somerlid, who was able to maintain his territories inviolable against MALCOLM, King of Scotland, they must have been of nearly the same extent as the present sheriffdom of Argyll. They are now confined to the district of Lorn, wherein five gentlemen of the name are still proprietors. The M'Donalds, the M'Phersons, the M'Lachlans, the M'Laines, the M'Nabs, and the M'Naughtens, seem to have been the principal companions in arms of the M'Dougalls. Of these friendships there are many traditional anecdotes.

HENRY-JAMES, b. 3 July, 1817, m. 27 Aug. 1840, Jane, dau. of Hamilton Stuart Wallace, Esq. of Omagh, co. Tyrone, by Margaret, his wife, sister to Colin Campbell, Esq. then of Tanderagee Castle, co. Armagh, and has issue two daus., Mary and Jane-Moore.
Francis-John, an officer in the 9th Royal Lancers.

Mr. M'Farlane raised and formed the Royal Irish Wagon-train in 1803, and continued as Captain-Commandant of that corps for about thirty years.

Lineage.

"The clan Pharlan," says Skene, "is the only one, with the exception, perhaps, of the clan Donnachie, whose descent from the ancient earls of the district in which their possessions lay, can be proved by charter."

ALWYN, created Earl of Lenox by MALCOLM IV., had two sons, ALWIN and Ethus. The elder,

ALWIN, is designated, in the chartulary of Glasgow, "Alwin, Earl of Lenox, son of Earl Alwin;" and he is recorded as having endowed the church of Kilpatrick. He m. Eva, dau. of Gilchrist, Earl of Monteith, by whom he had issue, I. MALDWIN, third Earl of Lenox, his successor, whose male line failed in Donald, the fourth earl, his grandson's grandson, who d. in 1373; II. Dugal; III. Malcolm; IV. GILCHRIST. This

GILCHRIST obtained from his brother, Earl Maldwin, temp. ALEXANDER II., the barony of Arrochar: he was s. by his son,

DUNCAN, who had a charter from his cousin Malcolm, confirming these baronies, and was one of those forced to submit to EDWARD I. in 1296. He m. his cousin, Matilda, dau. of the said Malcolm, and was s. by his son,

MALDWIN, a constant companion of ROBERT BRUCE; he was s. by his son,

BARTHOLOMEW, in Gaelic, Partholan, or PHARLAN; he was living temp. DAVID BRUCE, and left a son,

MALCOLM MAC-PHARLAN, or the son of Pharlan, as is shewn by deeds dated 1344, "Testatur his testibus Malcolmo Fleming, Comite de Wigton, Johanne Stewart de Darnley," &c. Donald, the sixth Earl of Lenox, dying without sons, 1373, the earldom should have devolved on Gilchrist's great-great-grandson; but as the said Earl Donald, contrary to the feudal system, left his estate to his daughter, Malcolm declined claiming the title. He was s. by his son,

DUNCAN MACFARLANE, who had a charter in the reign of ROBERT III. from Duncan, Earl of Lenox, wherein he is designed "Duncanus Macfarlane, filius et hæres Malcolmi Macfarlane, Domini Arrochar," &c., dated Inchmurin, 1395. He m. Christian, dau. of Sir Colin Campbell, of Lochow, progenitor of the Duke of Argyle, by whom he had JOHN and Thomas, and d. in the reign of JAMES I. The elder,

JOHN MACFARLANE, of that ilk and Arrochar, m. Jean, dau. of Sir Adam Mure, and dying in the beginning of the reign of JAMES II., was s. by his son,

DUNCAN MACFARLANE, of that ilk and Arrochar, retoured heir in 1441: he had two sons, WALTER, his heir; and JOHN, ancestor of the Macfarlanes of Kenmore, Dunnamanich, in the north of Ireland, &c. The son and heir,

WALTER MACFARLANE, of that ilk and Arrochar, m. a dau. of James, second Lord Livingstone, and had two sons, ANDREW, his heir; and DUGAL, ancestor of the Macfarlanes of Tullichintall. The son and heir,

ANDREW MACFARLANE, of that ilk and Arrochar, living in 1493, m. a dau. of John Stewart, Earl of Lenox and Lord Darnley, and had a son,

SIR JOHN MACFARLANE, of that ilk and Arrochar, knighted by JAMES IV. He m. a dau. of James, second Lord Hamilton, by whom he had ANDREW and Robert. He m. 2ndly, Lady Helen Stewart, dau. of John, third Earl of Athol. He was killed at Flodden Field, and s. by his son,

ANDREW MACFARLANE, of that ilk and Arrochar, who m. Lady Margaret Cunningham, dau. of William, Earl of Glencairn, Lord High Treasurer of Scotland in the reign of JAMES V., and had two sons, DUNCAN, his heir; and George, of Markinch, ancestor of the Macfarlanes of Kirkton. He d. in the reign of Queen MARY, and was s. by his son,

DUNCAN MACFARLANE, of that ilk and Arrochar, who assisted with the Lenox men, in 1544, at Glasgow Muir. After the battle, the Earl of Lenox retired to England, and m. Lady Margaret Douglas, niece of HEN. VIII. Duncan m. 1st, Isabel Stewart, dau. of Andrew, Lord Ochiltree, by whom he had no issue, and 2ndly, Anne, dau. of Sir John Colquhoun, of Luss, by whom he left at his decease (being killed at the battle of Pinkie) a son and successor,

ANDREW MACFARLANE, of that ilk, a great promoter of the Reformation, and a staunch adherent of the Regent Murray. Holinshed relates (p. 506), that coming up with his retainers, he decided the battle of Langside in favour of the Regent. The clan boast of having taken at this battle, three of Queen MARY'S standards, which, it is stated, were preserved for a long time in the family. The reward obtained by the Macfarlanes for their services on this occasion was of a very unsubstantial nature: the Regent granted to them the motto and crest added to their arms. He m. Agnes, dau. of Sir Patrick Maxwell, by whom he had JOHN, George, Humphry, and Elizabeth, m. to Malcolm Macfarlane, of Gartartan. The eldest son,

JOHN MACFARLANE, of that ilk, m. 1st, Susan, dau. of George Buchanan, by whom he had no issue, and 2ndly, Lady Helen Stewart, dau. of Francis, Earl of Bothwell, (by Lady Margaret Douglas, his wife, dau. of the Earl of Angus,) by whom he had WALTER, his heir. He m. 3rdly, Elizabeth Campbell, of the Argyll family, and had by her four sons, Duncan, who d. unm.; Andrew, of Drumfad; John, ancestor of George Macfarlane, of Glenralich; and George, ancestor of Macfarlane of Clachan. He m. 4thly, Margaret, dau. of James Murray, of Strowan, but by her had no child. This John Macfarlane founded an almshouse opposite his castle at Elenvow, for the benefit of poor travellers up the lake. His eldest son,

WALTER MACFARLANE, of that ilk, was fined 3000 marks, July, 1646, (as stated in the "Minutes of Parliament,") for his loyalty to King CHARLES, and his adherence to Montrose. He was twice besieged by CROMWELL'S men, and his castle of Inverouglass burned to the ground. He had two sons, JOHN and ANDREW. The elder,

JOHN MACFARLANE, of that ilk, m. Grizel, dau. of Sir Colin Laumont, but having no male issue, was s. by his brother,

ANDREW MACFARLANE, of that ilk, who m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of John Buchanan, of Ross, by whom he had two sons, JOHN, his heir; and Walter. He m. 2ndly,

Jean, dau. of Campbell, of Strachan, by whom he had five sons, I. Andrew, a major in the army, killed at Malplaquet; II. William, also in the army, m. a dau. of Govan, of Buchapel; III. Duncan, a captain in the army, m. a French lady, and had issue; IV. Archibald, an officer, killed at Malplaquet; V. Walter, also an officer killed at Malplaquet. The eldest,

Col. John Macfarlane, of that ilk, offered to raise a regiment for James VII., on the landing of the Prince of Orange; but Viscount Dundee being killed at the Pass of Killikrankie, in 1689, James's hopes were crushed, and there was no need of it. He m. 1st, Agnes, dau. of Sir Hugh Wallace, of Wollmot, by whom he had a son, Andrew, who d. young. He m. 2ndly, Helen, dau. of Robert, second Viscount Arbuthnot, by whom he had four sons, I. Walter, his heir; II. Robert, d. young; III. William; IV. Alexander, F.R.S., who settled in Jamaica, and was a judge and member of assembly in that island: he was a distinguished mathematician, but d. young; his estates fell to his brothers. The eldest son,

Walter Macfarlane, of that ilk, m. Lady Elizabeth Erskine, sister of Thomas, sixth Earl of Kellie, but had no issue. Walter Macfarlane, of that ilk, is as celebrated by historians for his indefatigable labours among the ancient records of his country as his ancestors had been, in their day, for prowess in the field. The extensive and valuable collections which he has left attest his industry and ability, and will long remain memorials of the greatest interest to all inquirers into ancient history. He d. in the year 1767, was buried in Glasgow Cathedral, and s. by his brother,

William Macfarlane, of that ilk, (the twenty-third in a direct line, and male heir of the Earl of Lenox,) whose family left Scotland, and settled in North America.

The Irish branch of the family was founded by Malcolm Macfarlane, nephew of Col. John Macfarlane, of that ilk, and grandson of Andrew Macfarlane, of that ilk. He m. about 1725, Janet Drummond, granddau. of James Drummond, fourth Earl of Perth, created Duke by James VII., and d. about 1729, leaving a son,

Francis Macfarlane, about three years old at his father's death, who, in consequence of his mother's family suffering much from their adherence to the cause of King James, spent most of his younger days at Thurlestane Castle, with Francis, sixth Baron Napier. He was at Preston Pans, in 1745, where he was beside Col. Gardiner, when killed; and after travelling through Germany, went to the West Indies, in an official capacity with the Governor-general, and subsequently was associated officially with Lord Pulteney in the British embassy to Portugal, and was present at the siege of Belle Isle; after that event he returned, and purchasing some property in Ireland, settled in that country, where he became generally esteemed by all classes. To this Francis, "his cousin," Walter Macfarlane, of that ilk, the learned genealogist, transmitted a copy of the family pedigree. He m. 1st, in 1766, Jane Hastie, of Edinburgh, by whom he had, with a dau. Jane, who m. Mr. Bevan, of Wales, and d. s. p., three sons,

Suffolk, post-capt., R.N., b. 30 May, 1769, m. 1803, his cousin Mary, dau. of James Hastie, Esq. of London, and had issue, Francis-James, an officer in the R.N., d. in the West Indies; Mary-Anne, dec.; and Elizabeth. Capt. Macfarlane was signal-lieut. under Lord Howe, 1 June, 1794, and distinguished himself under Sir Roger Curtis and Lord Bridport.

Francis, of Longford and Pacefield, co. Dublin, b. 1771, m. in 1832, Maria, Miss James of Bristol, and has issue, Francis-Thomas, b. 2 July, 1835, and Jane.

He eventually set fire to the fortress himself to prevent its falling into the enemy's hands. In 1648, Col. Mac Gillycuddy raised a regt. at his own expense for King Charles; but, in 1650, forced, with many other Royalists, to abandon his country, he became a wanderer on the continent of Europe, where he remained until the Restoration, at which auspicious epoch he returned to England, and obtained repossession of a small part of his lands. Subsequently, on the accession of William III., he was appointed commander-in-chief of the Irish regiments collected in the Isle of Wight, in support of the Emperor of Germany. MACHELL OF CRACKENTHORPE.

MACHELL, CHRISTOPHER-SCOTT, Esq. of Beverley, co. York, s. to the representation of the ancient family of Machell of Crackenthorpe, at the decease of his father, 24 Sept. 1827.

Lineage.

The antiquity of this family is unquestionable, and can be established by family papers, some of which are coeval with the Norman Conquest. Several writers, too, of note, add their testimony. In Holinshed's Chronicles of England, Rogerus Malus Catulus* occurs as Vice-Chancellor of England, temp. RICHARD I.; and in Lingard's History, HENRY VI. is recorded as having taken refuge in the house of JOHN MACHELL, of Crackenthorpe, after the battle of Hexham. Guillim, in his Heraldry, makes honourable mention of two Machells, Hugh, and Guy, who served at Tournay under HENRY VIII.; and for further reference we might adduce Dugdale, Pennant, and Whitaker.

HALTHE MALUS CATULUS, son of "Catulus de Castro Catulino," in Westmoreland, had two sons, RALPH of Crackenthorpe, and Umfridus of Lowther. The former, RALPH DE CRACKENTHORPE, was father, by Eva, his wife, of three sons, WILLIAM, Galfrid, and Alexander. The eldest, WILLIAM MAUCHAEL, styled also in one deed Willielmus Malus Catulus, had two sons, JOHN, his heir; and Roger, Chancellor of England, temp. RICHARD I.: he was drowned off Cyprus during the holy war. The elder son, JOHN MALCHAEL, of Crackenthorpe, living temp. HENRY II., was father, by Margery, his wife, of

JOHN DE MALCHAEL, Lord of Crackenthorpe, temp. King JOHN, who was witness to the grant by Adam de Kirkbythore of the advowson of that church to Robert de Veteriponte. By Beatrix, his wife, he had a son and successor, THOMAS MALCHAEL, of Crackenthorpe, father of WALTER MALCHAEL, of Crackenthorpe, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Thomas de Beauchamp, and left at his decease, 43 EDWARD III., a son, JOHN MALCHAEL, who m. a dau. of William Threlkeld, and was s. by his son, WILLIAM MAUCHAEL, of Crackenthorpe, who m. Margaret, dau. of William Thornborough, and was father of JOHN MAUCHELL, in whose house at Crackenthorpe, according to Lingard, King HENRY VI. took refuge, after the battle of Hexham. This John, living in 1446, m. Catherine Huddlestone, and had issue,

JOHN, of Crackenthorpe, who m. a dau. of Gilbert Wharton, and d. 2 or 3 HENRY VIII., leaving issue,

Hugh, who also fought at Tournay, and was appointed deputy-warden of the West Marshes under his son-in-law, Lord Wharton, 28 HENRY VIII. By Juliana, his wife, he had, with other issue, a son, John (Sir), Knt., M.P. for Horsham, (from whom derived, through a pedigree of six descents, Isabella Machell, heiress of the estates at Hills and Horsham, m. 1st, to Arthur, Lord Ingram, 3rd Viscount Irwin,) and a dau., Eleonora, m. to her cousin John Machell.

The second,

M'KERRELL OF HILLHOUSE.

M'KERRELL, HENRY, Esq. of Hillhouse, co. Ayr, s. his brother, John M'Kerrell, Esq., in 1835.

Lineage.

The M'Kerrells have long flourished in Ayrshire, and are presumed to be of Norman origin, the name occurring on the roll of Battle Abbey.

Kiriell, Kirel, Kirrel, or Kerrell, (as at various times spelt,) is a surname now very rarely to be met with. It is said to exist in Sweden, another proof of Normanic origin. In Scotland, the family of Hillhouse alone bears it.

The first of the name, and the most remote now on Scottish record, Sir John M'Kirel, distinguished himself at the celebrated battle of Otterburn, 19 Aug. 1388, by wounding and capturing Rouel de Percie, who held the second command in the English host, and whose brother, the renowned Hotspur, was made prisoner by Sir John Montgomerie, (from whom spring the Earls of Eglinton,) in the same sanguinary conflict.

The next of the name, although probably there were six intermediate links at least, from whom the chain continues unbroken,

WILLIAM M'KERREL, of Hillhouse, m. in 1577, Elizabeth, dau. of John Fullerton, of Dregham, by Helen, dau. of Sir J. Chalmers, of Gadgirth, and was s. by his son,

In 1636 he is retoured heir to his father in the fifty-shilling lands of Godring,* and of the Kemmoch land, and was s. himself at his decease by his son,

William M'Kerrell, of Hillhouse, whose retour is dated in 1643, and who was s. by his brother,

MACKINNON OF MACKINNON.

Mackinnon, William-Alexander, Esq. of Mackinnon, M.P., b. 2 Aug. 1789; m. 3 Aug. 1812, Emma, dau. and sole heiress of Joseph Palmer, Esq. of Rush House, co. Dublin, and Palmerstown, co. Mayo, and has issue,

III. Daniel-Lionel, an officer in the Coldstream Guards.

I. Emma-Mary. II. Louisa-Harriet.

III. Flora-Elizabeth.

Mr. Mackinnon is a magistrate and deputy-lieut. for the counties of Middlesex, Hants, and Essex. He is chief of the clan Mackinnon in the Western Highlands of Scotland, and sits in parliament for Lymington.

Lineage.

The Mackinnons descend from Fingon, youngest son of Alpin, King of Scotland: the name Macfingon became subsequently Macfinden, and then Mackinnon.

Little can be accurately learned as to the early history of the Mackinnons; but there is one event of importance which is recorded by clear testimony. On the decease of John of the Isles, in the fourteenth century, Mackinnon excited his second son, John Mor, to rebel against his eldest brother, and his faction was joined by the Macleans and the Macleods. But Donald, the elder brother, was supported by so large a majority of the tribe, that he drove John Mor and his party out of the Isles, and pursued them to Ireland. Eventually, John Mor appealed to his brother's mercy, and was pardoned; but Mackinnon, as the instigator of the rebellion, was seized and put to death.

On the forfeiture of the last Lord of the Isles, and in the disturbances which continued during the following century, the name of Sir Lauchlan Mackinnon occurs very frequently, and he appears to have been a man of consideration.

In 1651, Lachlan Mackinnon, of Stratherdil, Isle of Sky, chief of Mackinnon, was made Knight Banneret by Charles II. on the field of Worcester. He left a son, Daniel-Mor Mackinnon, chief of the clan, who left, with other issue, Daniel Mackinnon, (youngest son,) who quitted his home on account of a quarrel with his father in the hunting field, and emigrated to Antigua, where he purchased some lots of land, and took a very conspicuous part in politics, particularly in the affair of Governor Parke. He m. the sister of Col. Thomas, and d. in March, 1720, in his sixty-second year, having had, with a dau., Elizabeth, m. to — Carlisle, Esq., and two younger sons, George and Samuel, an eldest son and heir, MACKINTOSH OF MACKINTOSH.

MACKINTOSH, ALEXANDER, Esq. of Mackintosh, styled Captain of the Clan Chattan, m. 29 Dec. 1812, Mary, sixth dau. of the late John Glass, Esq. of Minorca. This chief s. his father, the late Angus Mackintosh, 26 Jan. 1833.

Lineage.

GILLICATTAN, head or chief of the Clan Chattan, who, on account of his immense stature, rare military genius, and other accomplishments, acquired the designation MOIR, lived in the reign of King MALCOLM CANMORE, and left a son,

DIARMED or DORMUND, captain of the clan Chatham, who s. his father about the year 1090, and was father of

GILLICATTAN, the second of that name, captain of the clan Chattan, who flourished and made a considerable figure in the reign of King DAVID I., left two sons,

I. DIARMED, and II. MURIACH, and was s. by the elder,

DIARMED, captain of the clan Chattan, who did not long survive his father, and dying without issue, anno 1153, was s. by his brother,

MURIACH or MURDOCH, who, being a younger son, was bred to the church, and was parson of Kingousie, then a large and honourable benefice; but, upon the death of his elder brother without issue, he became head of his family, and captain of the clan Chattan. He then obtained a dispensation from the pope, in 1173, and m. a dau. of the Thane of Calder, by whom he had five sons,

I. GILLICATTAN, his heir.
II. Ewan, or Eugine, called Baan, from the fairness of his complexion. He lived in the reign of ALEXANDER II., and, surnames about this time becoming hereditary, he obtained that of MACPARSON, or son of the Parson. He m., and left three sons,
   1. KENNETH, ancestor of CLUNY MACPHERSON.
   2. John, living temp. ALEXANDER III., designed of Pitmean. He m. and had two sons, from whom descended many families of the name, viz., the MACPHERSONS of Pitmean, Strathmassie, Ferfodoun, Kenlochlagan, Invertromeny, Pitchern, Clune, Pitgowan, Garvamore, Balladmore, Balladbeg, Inneraven, Carnbeg, Craegarnell, &c. &c.
   3. Gillies, progenitor of the MACPHERSONS of Inneressie.
III. Neill, called Cromb, from his stooping and round shoulders. "He had," says Douglas, "a rare mechanical genius, applied himself to the business of a smith, and made and contrived several utensils of iron, of very curious workmanship." He is stated to have taken a surname from his trade, and to have been ancestor of the Scottish families of Smith.
IV. Ferquhard, Gilleriach, the Swift, from whom sprung the Macgillivrays of Dunmaglash, in Invernesshire, and those of Pennygoit, in the Isle of Mull.
V. David, Dow, or the Black, from whom the old Davidsons of Invernahaven are said to be descended.

Muriach d. towards the close of the reign of WILLIAM the Lion, and was s. by his eldest son,

GILLICATTAN, third of the name, captain of the clan Chattan, whose only son,

DOUGAL PHAOL, or, according to Nisbet, Dougal Daol, s., and was captain of the clan Chattan. He d. in the reign of ALEXANDER III. leaving an only dau.,

EVA, who, in 1291 or 1292, became the wife of ANGUS MACKINTOSH, of that ilk, chief of the clan Mackintosh, and conveyed to her husband a considerable portion of the clan Chattan estate.

Dougal dying thus, without male issue, the dignity of captain of the clan Chattan has ever since been the subject of contention between the families of Mackintosh of Mackintosh, (claiming the honour as representatives of the senior line, through the above-mentioned Eva, the dau. and heiress of Dougal,) and the Macphersons of Clunie, (founding their pretensions on their male filiation, and representing Ewan, the uncle of Dougal.) The Mackintoshes obtaining with Eva, the dau. of Dougal, the Lochaber estate, the inhabitants thereof followed the chief of Mackintosh as their superior and master, who was therefore designed captain of the clan Chattan. Another portion of the clan, however, adhering to Kenneth, as the heir male, retired to Badenoch, where they settled, and where they soon acquired large possessions: they have been always styled the clan Macpherson, and claim likewise to be captains of the clan Chattan. We venture not an opinion on the merits of the rival houses, but merely give, without note or comment, the pretensions of each. The family of Mackintosh, into which the heiress of Clan Chattan married, is deduced, as the family history plainly and satisfactorily shews, from SHAW or SHEAGH, second son of Duncan McDuff, the second of that name, and third Earl of Fife. This Shaw or Sheagh being sent by King MALCOLM IV., in the year 1163, to repress a rebellion in Morayland, which he effected in a most signal manner, was rewarded with the constabulary of the castle of Inverness, "Breachlu," "Petty and Forristrie" of "Shathdean," and from his residence among the people of the country who spoke the Gaelic only, was called Mac-intosh-ich, that is to say, Thane's son, or the principal and first man in dignity in the country, and so became the first of the name, and the progenitor of a long line of chiefs, as is very obvious from the present one, being the 26th chief of the name, and 21st of Clan Chattan. Two of the chiefs had the honour of Knighthood. Lachlan, the 17th laird, who was knighted by King CHARLES, and was made a Knight of the Bedchamber; and Æneas, the 23rd laird, who was created a Baronet by GEORGE III.

WILLIAM MACKINTOSH, of that ilk, eldest son* and heir of Angus and Eva, his wife, heiress of clan Chattan, was designed captain of the clan Chattan, and added to the ancient armorial bearings of the family, "Or, a lymphad, sa.," for clan Chattan. He was first of this family who had possession of the barony of Moy, and had also, from John Pilmore, Bishop of Murray, a new lease of Rothimurchus, dated 19 March, 1347. In his time the feuds between the clan Chattan and the clan Cameron began, which subsisted long, and much bloodshed was committed on both sides, but the clan Cameron, at last, were mostly driven out of Lochaber. This William m. 1st, Florence, dau. of the Thane of Calder, and by her had (with a dau. Mora, who m. to Rory MacAllan vic Ronald, of Moydart) a son and heir, LAUCHLAN. He m. 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of Rory More Macleod, of the Lewis, and by her had a son, MALCOLM, of whom hereafter as successor to his uncle, and four daus., Janet, m. to Hay, of Park; Mora, m. to Hugh Rose, of Kilravock; the third, m. to Lord Ogilvie; and the youngest m. to Culloden. He d. in 1368, and was s. by his eldest son,

LAUCHLAN MACKINTOSH, of that ilk, captain of the clan Chattan, who m. Agnes Fraser, dau. of Lord Lovat, and had a son, FERQUHARD, his heir, and a dau., Margaret, m. to Chisholm of Straglash. He d. in 1407, and was s. by his son,

FERQUHARD MACKINTOSH, of that ilk, who m. Giles, dau. of Alexander Innes, of Innes, by whom he had three sons, Duncan, Malcolm, and Ferquhard, but their posterity renounced all right and title they had to the estate of Mackintosh, and Ferquhard was s. by his uncle,

MALCOLM MACKINTOSH, who joined the Lord of the Isles, and was one of the chief commanders at the battle of Harlaw in 1411, and for his services that day got confirmed to him the right and possession of the lands of Glenroy and Glenspean in Brae-Lochaber, &c. In 1428, he was appointed by King JAMES I. constable and keeper of the castle of Inverness, which he nobly defended the same year against Alexander, Earl of Ross, who besieged it. He m. Moora, (alias Nien Ronald,) dau. of the laird of Moydart, and had four sons and five daus.; of the former, Duncan was his heir, and Lauchlan, the second, who resided for the most part at Gillovy, in Badenoch, d. in Sept. 1493, leaving two sons, WILLIAM, of whom hereafter, as successor to his cousin, and LAUCHLAN, successor to his brother. He d. in 1457, and was s. by his eldest son,

DUNCAN MACKINTOSH, of that ilk, who had charters from King JAMES III. and IV. He m. Flora, dau. of Alexander Macdonald, Earl of Ross and Lord of the Isles, and had several children, all of whom predeceased him except FERQUHARD his successor, and Marjory, m. to Ewen Cameron, of Lochyell. He d. in 1496, and was s. by his only surviving son,

FERQUHARD MACKINTOSH, of that ilk, who m. Giles Fraser, a dau. of the Lord Lovat, and by her had an only son, Donald, who d. in infancy, and four daus.: the eldest m. to Guthrie, of that ilk; the second m. to Strachan, of Glenkindy; the third m. to Alaster Macallan, captain of the clan Ranald; and the fourth m. to Shaw, of Rothemurchus. Ferquhard d. in 1514, without male issue, and was s. by his cousin,

WILLIAM MACKINTOSH, who became chief of the name, and captain of the clan Chattan. He m. Isabella Macnevan, heiress of the barony of Dunnachton, and d. soon after his accession, having been murdered at Inverness, 22 May, 1515. He was s. by his brother,

LAUCHLAN MACKINTOSH, who m. in 1520, Jean, only dau. and heir of the line of Sir Alexander Gordon, of Lochinvar, by Elizabeth Stewart, his wife, sister of James, Earl of Murray, and by her had one son, WILLIAM, his heir; and two daus., Margaret, m. to Walter Innes, of Calrossie, and Muriel, m. to Alexander Fraser, grandchild of Lord Lovat. Lauchlan was barbarously murdered by some of the lawless part of his clan, when alone, at his hunting seat of Ravog, in 1529, and was s. by his only son,

WILLIAM MACKINTOSH, of that ilk, who was only three years old, but was carefully educated under the inspection of his friends the Earl of Cassilis and the family of Finlater. A man of great abilities, he was appointed, in 1544, by the Earl of Murray, deputy-lieutenant of Invernesshire, and had many other offices of trust conferred upon him. He m. Margaret Ogilvie, a dau. of the family of Finlater, and had two sons and a dau., William, d. young; LAUCHLAN, heir to his father; Margaret, m. 1st, to Grant, of that ilk; and 2ndly, to the laird of Abergeldy; 3rdly, to the laird of Pitsligo; and 4thly, to the laird of Duffus. This William having had some differences with the family of Gordon, was tried and put to death at Aberdeen, in 1550. His forfeiture being removed soon after by act of parliament, he was s. by his son, LAUCHLAN MACKINTOSH, of that ilk, who is mentioned in a charter under the great seal to his son Angus. I. Lilias. II. Jane. III. Elizabeth-Henrietta.

IV. Marianne. V. Margaret-Maxwell.

Mr. Maclaine is a magistrate and deputy-lieut. for Argyllshire.

Lineage.

Gaelic antiquaries assert that the surname of Maclean was originally Macgillean, and that it was derived from the celebrated Highland warrior, (the progenitor of the family,) Gillean, who was denominated Gillean-ni-Tuiodh, from his ordinary weapon, a battle-axe, (in Gaelic, Tuoidh,) which his descendants wear to this day in their crest, betwixt a laurel and a cypress branch.

GILLEOIN, or GILLEAN, as now commonly pronounced, a man of rank and distinction, of the reign of King ALEXANDER III., fought under that monarch at the battle of Largs. He d. before 1300, leaving a son, GILLISE MAC GILLOIN, (or son of Gilloin,) which became the surname of the family. He fought under King ROBERT BRUCE at Bannockburn, and dying some time before that prince, left a son, called GILLICOLM MAC GILLOIN, who s. him, and d. in the reign of King DAVID BRUCE. He was father of

EOIN DUIDH, or BLACK JOHN, who was settled in the isle of Mull, where he held large possessions, particularly the lands of Dowart. He d. in the reign of ROBERT II., and left two sons, Lauchlan Lubanich, and EUCHAN, or HECTOR-REGANACH, but which was the elder cannot be positively ascertained. The former was ancestor of the MACLEANS of Morvaren, Barts.; the latter,

HECTOR-REGANACH MAC GILLION, lived in the reigns of ROBERT II. and III., and held considerable lands in the isle of Mull, particularly the barony of Lochbuy. He is said to have m. a dau. of the Lord of the Isles, (who was superior of all the lands of Mull,) and d. in the beginning of the reign of King JAMES, leaving a son and heir,

JOHN-OIG MACGILLION, or MACLEAN, of Lochbuy, who received from King JAMES IV., with whom he appears to have been in great favour, several charters under the great seal, confirming to him many lands and baronies which had been the property of his ancestors. He m. a dau. of Macdougal of Lorn, and had several sons. He was killed, with his two elder sons, in a family feud with Macleans of Dowart, and was s. by his only surviving son,

John Moir d. before 1600, and was s. by his elder son,

Macleod of Macleod is a magistrate and deputy-lieut. for the co. Inverness.

Lineage.

OLAVE OLOIS, King of Man and the Isles, who d. in 1237, left, by his first wife, three sons, HAROLD, REGINALD, and MAGNUS, who all successively enjoyed the kingdom of Man, which terminated in 1265, by the surrender made of the sovereignty by MAGNUS, King of Norway, to ALEXANDER III. of Scotland, and in the same year, MAGNUS, the last King of Man, died. Olave, by his third wife, Christina, dau. of Farquhar, Earl of Ross, had three sons, Guin or Gun, of whom the Guns in Sutherland; LEOID, LOYD, or LEOD, of whom the clan MACLEOD; and Leaundrish, of whom the clan Leandrish, in Ross.

LEOD, second son of OLAVE OLOIS or OLAUS V., King of Man and the Isles, by the Earl of Ross's daughter, having been fostered in the house of Pol, obtained from him the Herries, from which he (Leod) and his descendants taking their designation, were, in former times, styled of Glenelg and Dunvegan. He m. the dau. of Macraild, Armine, a Danish knight, and by her acquired the lands of Menginish, Bracadale, Durinish, Lindale, Vaterness, and a part of Trotterness, and had two sons, TORMODE, who succeeded him; and Torquhil, ancestor of the Macleods of Lewis, whose successors were possessed of a great estate when forfeited in the reign of King JAMES VI. Both the families had the surname or patronymic of Macleod, but were distinguished by the appellation of Shiel Tormoid, or the descendants of Tormoid, and Shiel Torquhil, or the descendants of Torquhil, and by the designations of "Macleod of Herries," and "Macleod of Lewis." The elder son and heir,

TORMODE MACLEOD, was father of

MALCOLM MACLEOD, known by the name of Caishravir, or Thick-legged, who obtained a charter, before the year 1360, from King DAVID BRUCE. He had three sons, viz.,

JOHN, his successor.
Tormod, from whom sprang that branch of the Macleods in Herries which possessed Bernera before Sir Norman Macleod got it from the family as his patrimony.
Murdo, ancestor of the family of Gesto, from whom John Macleod, major in Gen. Gordon's Regiment of Scots, in the service of the United Provinces.

The eldest son and heir,

JOHN MACLEOD, was s. by his son,

WILLIAM MACLEOD, commonly called Achlerick, or formerly a clerk, as he was, at first, but the second son and bred to the church. His property being at one time invaded by enemies, chiefly followers of Macdonald, Lord of the Isles, he came up with the aggressors at Lochsligichan, and by a stratagem, evincing no ordinary military genius, gave them a total overthrow. The plunder of this exploit he divided at a rock, which, from the circumstance, retains to this day the name of Creggan ni feavigh, or Rock of the Spoil. He m. a dau. of the Ogilvies, and had two sons, JOHN, his successor; and Tormod, from whom are descended the branches of the Macleods, called the Mac Vieulliams, of whom Borline &c., and the Macvie alister Roys, of whom Ballimore, St. Kilda, &c. The elder son and heir,

JOHN MACLEOD, who was remarkable for great bodily strength and personal courage, distinguished himself amongst the companions of Donald, Lord of the Isles, at the battle of Haarlaw. He m. a dau. of the family of Douglas, and had WILLIAM, his heir; and Tormod, whose male heir was the William of Meidle mentioned in the destination of the estate made by Sir Rory Macleod, to be hereafter specified, but that branch is now extinct. The elder son,

WILLIAM MACLEOD, alias William Nimbristigh, or the Skirmisher, went by order of King JAMES II. to aid John, Earl of Ross, against his bastard son, and was lost in a naval engagement in Cammisveraigor Bloody-bay, in the Sound of Mull. He m. a dau. of Maclean of Lochbuy. He was s. by his son,

ALEXANDER MACLEOD, known as Crottach, or Humpbacked, who m. a dau. of Cameron of Lochiel, and had three sons and a dau. The daughter m. 1st, John-Oge-M'Dhoil Ghruamigh, second son of the family of Slate; she m. 2ndly, Allan-M'Iain, Captain of Clanranald, and from this chief's bad treatment of her arose the feuds between M'Leod and Clanranald; her third husband was M'Donald of Keppoch. Alexander Crottach obtained a charter from King JAMES IV., which probably was the first granted to the family of any lands they possessed in the Æbudæ, or the Western Isles, by the kings of Scotland. The charter is dated 15 June, 1498. This laird rebuilt the monastery of Rowadale, in Harris. He was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM MACLEOD, who was served heir in special to his father, and in virtue of a precept from the chancery was, 15 May, 1548, infeft in the whole family estate. By his wife, Anne or Agnes Fraser, dau. of Hugh, fifth Lord Fraser of Lovat, he had an only dau., MARY, m. 1st, to Duncan Campbell, of Castleswyne, younger son of Auchinbreck, and 2ndly, to M'Niel of Barra. He was s. at his decease, having thus no son, by his next brother,

DONALD MACLEOD, who enjoyed the inheritance but a brief period, being murdered in Kingsborrow, in Trotterness, then a part of the estate. He was s. by his brother,

TORMOD MACLEOD, of Macleod, who in July, 1580, was infeft in the whole estate. This laird m. 1st, Giles, dau. of Hector Maclean, of Duart, by whom he had issue,

I. Margaret, m. to Donald Macdonald, of Slate.
II. A dau., m. 1st, to Macleod of Lewis; and 2ndly, to Macdonald of Benbecula.

Tormod m. 2ndly, a dau. of the Earl of Argyll, and had by her a dau., Jannet, who became the wife of Maclean of Coll. Macleod was a man of courage and conduct, and an adherent of the unhappy MARY of Scotland. He d. in March, 1584, and was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM MACLEOD, of Macleod, who was served heir 31 July, 1585. He m. Janet, dau. of Lachlan M'Intosh, of Dunachten, and dying in October, 1590, without issue, was s. by his brother,

Sir Roderick Macleod, of Macleod, commonly Rory More, or Great Roderick, who received the honour of knighthood from King James VI., and was infeft in the whole estate, as heir to his brother, in September, 1596. This laird appears to have been involved in much difficulty, but his address and courage bore him eventually through. In 1613, the king conferred the honour of knighthood on him, and in the June of that year he wrote three several letters from Greenwich, recommending Macleod and his affairs, in the strongest terms, to the privy council of Scotland. On 16 June, 1616, his majesty granted to Sir Roderick a licence, under his hand and seal, to come out of Scotland to court whenever he should think convenient, without being liable to any challenge or pursuit for so doing. Sir Roderick d. in the beginning of 1626, leaving issue by his wife, Isabella, dau. of Macdonald of Glengarry, five sons and five daughters, viz.,

I. John, his successor.
II. Roderick, of Talliskir.

IV. Janet, m. to John Macleod, of Rasay.
V. Florence, m. to Donald M'Sween.

His eldest son and heir,

John Macleod, of Macleod, surnamed John More, from his great size, was infeft in the whole family estate, 9 Nov. 1626. This laird was a stanch royalist, and opposed the measures of the Covenanters from the commencement, for which conduct he received a letter of thanks from King Charles I., dated at Durham, 2 May, 1639. He continued firm in his allegiance to the hour of his death, which happened in September, 1649. He was remarkable for his goodness and piety, and took so much pains to civilize the country, that he acquired the appellation of Lot in Sodom. He m. Sibella, dau. of Kenneth, Lord M'Kenzie of Kintail, and had issue,

Roderick, } successive lairds.
John, }
Mary, m. 1st, to Sir James Macdonald, of Slate, and 2ndly, to Muir, of Rowallan.

Giles, m. 1st, to Sir Allan M'Lean, of Duart, and 2ndly, to Campbell of Glendaruel.
Sibella, m. to Thomas Fraser, of Beaufort, and was mother of Simon Fraser, the last Lord Lovat.
Margaret, m. to Sir James Campbell, of Laars.

The eldest son,

Roderick Macleod, fifteenth laird of Macleod, was served heir in special to his father, 22 Nov. 1655, and on 24 Feb. in the next year infeft in the whole estate, except the barony of Glenelg, in which he was infeft 19 Oct. 1677. This chief being under age until the close of the great rebellion, his uncles, Sir Roderick and Sir Normand Macleod, with their clans and followers, having adhered to the royal cause, the estate of Macleod was sequestered, but when all Scotland submitted, the laird at length capitulated, 30 May, 1655, and was admitted by General Monk to Oliver's protection, on his finding security for his peaceable deportment, under the penalty of £6000, and paying a fine of £2500; his uncles were, however, so obnoxious, that they were expressly excepted in the capitulation, and were obliged to live ever after in seclusion. He m. Margaret, eldest dau. of Sir John M'Kenzie, of Tarbat, but dying in Jan. 1664, without issue, was s. by his brother,

MACLEOD OF RASAY.

Macleod, John, Esq. of Rasay, North Britain, b. 27 March, 1806; m. 1 Sept. 1835, Mary, only child of Major-Gen. Sir Donald Macleod, K.C.B., of the Hon. E. I. Co.'s service, and has a dau.,

Mary-Julia-Hastings.

Macleod of Rasay s. his father in Oct. 1823.

Lineage.

Torquil and Tormod, the sons of Leod, (see Macleod of Macleod,) were called "Macleods," or "Sons of Leod," and hence the surname of the family. The descendants of Torquil are distinguished by the appellation of "Siol Torquil," or "Race of Torquil," and "Macleods of Lewis," and their descendants. Those of Tormod, by that of "Siol Tormod," or "Race of Norman," and "Macleods of Herries," and their descendants.

These have always been two distinct clans, each independent of the other, and following their respective chiefs.

It is still disputed which was the elder; the seniority and precedence are claimed by the descendants of both.

Torquil was a faithful adherent of Robert Bruce, in whose reign he died. He m. Dorothea, dau. of William, Earl of Ross, and left a son and successor,

Roderick, third Baron of Lewis, who m. a dau. of

Mackintosh, of that ilk, and dying in the reign of DAVID II., was s. by his son,

TORQUIL, fourth Baron of Lewis, who received a charter from DAVID II., confirming to him the lands of Assynt. He m. Margaret Nicholson, by whom he got a considerable accession to his estate, and had a son, RODERICK, his heir. He d. in the reign of ROBERT II., and was s. by his son,

RODERICK, fifth Baron of Lewis. He m. Margaret Macdonald, dau. of the Lord of the Isles, by whom he had two sons and a dau., TORQUIL, his heir; NORMAN, of Assynt, ancestor of the Macleods of Assynt and Cadboll; and Margaret, m. to William Mackintosh, of that ilk. He d. in the reign of JAMES I., and was s. by his son,

TORQUIL, sixth Baron of Lewis, who d. in the reign of JAMES II., leaving a son and successor,

RODERICK, seventh Baron of Lewis. He m. Mary, dau. of Macleod of Herries, and had three sons, Roderick, Torquil, and Malcolm. The eldest, Roderick, was killed in the battle of the Bloody Bay, in 1480, where he was fighting in the cause of John, Earl of Ross and Lord of the Isles. The second son,

TORQUIL, s. his father, about 1495, as eighth Baron of Lewis. He m. the Lady Catherine Campbell, sister of Colin, first Earl of Argyle, and had a son JOHN, who forcibly obtained possession of the Lewis, and the command of the Siol Torquil; he left an only dau. and heir, m. to Donald Gorme, of Sleat. Becoming involved in a dispute with the government, he was formally denounced a rebel, and all his estates forfeited. The estates continued in possession of the crown until 1511, when they were restored to his brother,

MALCOLM, ninth Baron of Lewis. The island of Lewis, and the other possessions of the family, were confirmed to Malcolm, by a charter from JAMES IV., dated 29 June, 1511. This Malcolm m. Christina Urquhart, dau. of Thomas, Baron of Cromarty, by whom he had three sons,

RODERICK, afterwards 11th Baron of Lewis, who m. three times. By his first wife, Janet, dau. of John Mackenzie, of Kintail, there was a son, Torquil Connanach, who was never acknowledged by RODERICK, and whose contentions for the inheritance involved the clan in much warfare and bloodshed. Roderick's second marriage, in 1541, was with Barbara Stewart, dau. of Andrew, Lord Evandale and Ochiltree, and by her he had a son, Torquil Oighre, drowned in 1566. His third wife was a sister of Lauchlan Maclean, of Dowart, by whom he had two sons, TORQUIL DUBH, and Tormod, who, after an eventful life, d. in the service of Maurice, Prince of Orange. Old Roderick, whose life had been one continued scene of troubles, d. about the year 1590, and was s. by his son, TORQUIL DUBH, as 12th Baron of Lewis, whose right was disputed by Torquil Connanach, supported by the power of the Mackenzies. He m. a sister of Macleod of Herries, and had three sons, Roderick, who d. s. p. in Flanders; William, who d. young; and TORQUIL, who eventually went to Paris, where he was introduced to HENRY IV., then King of France, as "a brave man who had suffered much injustice in his own country." Henry generously gave him an appointment at his own Court, and Torquil remained in France till his death: he left no legitimate issue. Torquil Dubh was beheaded in 1597, and in the following year the island of Lewis was forfeited to the Crown, and granted by JAMES VI. to a company of Lowland adventurers.

MALCOLM, ancestor of the Macleods of Rasay.

NORMAN, ancestor of the Macleods of Edrachullis.

Malcolm d. about the year 1515: his second son,

MALCOLM MACLEOD, first Baron of Rasay, was left, on the death of his father in 1515, the islands of Rasay and Rona, and half the lands of Gairloch, in Rosshire, as his heritage. He was called "Malcolm Macgillecallum," or "Malcolm, the son of Malcolm," and hence the patronymic of the head of this house. In the year 1518, the Rasay men, with the rest of the Siol Torquil, followed their chief, John Mac Torquil, of the Lewis, the ally and friend of Sir Donald Macdonald, of Lochalch, in an expedition against Macian of Ardnamurchan, who was the enemy of Sir Donald. They defeated and slew Macian at the battle of "The Silver Craig," and many people were induced by this success to join their party. Sir Donald was, however, soon afterwards slain in Morven, and all his adherents dispersed and returned to their respective homes. Malcolm was a firm friend of his brother, "Old Roderick, of the Lewis," whom he aided against all his enemies. He d. about the year 1557, leaving two sons,

ALEXANDER, his heir.

Roderick, to whom his father left in patrimony the half of Gairloch.

Malcolm was s. by his son,

ALEXANDER MACLEOD, second Baron of Rasay. In his time first began the feud between the "Siol Gillecallum," or "Macleods of Rasay," and the Mackenzies of Gairloch, who wished to possess themselves of the whole of that property, and to expel the Macleods. Alexander d. about 1564, and left two sons,

MALCOLM-MACALISTER, his heir.

John, who greatly distinguished himself.

The elder son,

MALCOLM-MACALISTER, third Baron of Rasay, was called "Garoc," or "the Strong." It is this Malcolm that is mentioned in the charter granted to Roderick Macleod, of the Lewis, in 1571, as heir male of the Lewis family, failing issue male of the said Roderick. He was a brave and clever man, and, accompanied by his brother, John Macleod, in the year 1588, joined the Earl of Sutherland, in Caithness, where he (the Earl) was waging war against the Earl of Caithness. Great was the havoc and devastation they committed, until, as observes the historian, "their armies wandering in disarray, hid themselves in a fearful and confused tumult amongst the caves and rocky mountains; divers of the Caithness men were killed, and a great prey of cattle and goods was taken away, the like whereof was never seen in this country for many years. They burnt and wasted the town of Wick, but they saved the church, where they found the heart of the last Earl of Caithness, in a case of lead, the ashes of which heart were thrown to the wind by John Macleod, brother of Macgillecallum, of Rasay." Malcolm Garoc d. about 1590, and was s. by his son,

MALCOLM, fourth Baron of Rasay. He received a charter from the king, dated 1596, of the lands of Rasay, &c., in Invernesshire. In 1597, John Macleod, brother of Malcolm Garoc, was killed in a brawl, by Duncan Bane, of Tulloch. This Malcolm finding the family of his chief, Macleod of Lewis, on the decline, formed a league of friendship, offensive and defensive, with Donald Macdonald, of Slate; and in pledge of this friendship it was agreed, that always on the death of each Macdonald of Slate, his successor should give Macgillecallum a sword; and again, on the death of each Macgillecallum, his successor should give a sword to Macdonald of Slate. Both this custom, and the friendship of these two families for each other, have remained inviolate until this day. The feud between the "Siol Torquil" and the Mackenzies of Gairloch was now at its height. In the year 1611, a sea battle was fought before the old castle of Rasay, between Macgillecallum himself, and his followers, on one side, and Murdo Mackenzie, son and heir of Mackenzie of Gairloch, and his followers, on the other. It was a bloody contest, and continued all day. In the end, Murdo Mackenzie wounded Macgillecallum, and with his own hands put out his eyes, and threw him into the sea. All the Rasay men were killed, so also were Murdo Mackenzie, and Alexander Bane, son and heir of Bane of Tulloch, who was with Murdo Mackenzie, all of whose company perished, with three exceptions, who fought very manfully, and died shortly afterwards of their wounds. This was nearly the last battle fought between the Mackenzies and the Macleods, for soon afterwards the Mackenzies conquered the whole of Gairloch, of which they have since kept possession. Malcolm having been killed in this battle, (anno 1611,) was s. by his son, ALEXANDER, fifth Baron of Rasay, who m. Julia, niece of Sir Roderick Macleod, of Herries, by whom he had four sons, Alexander, John, Malcolm, and Murdoch, and two daus., Katherine and Florence. He d. in 1643, and was s. by his son, ALEXANDER, sixth Baron of Rasay. He m. Sybella, dau. of Roderick Mackenzie, of Applecross, by whom he had only two daus., Janet and Julia, and dying soon after, was s. by his second brother,

JOHN, seventh Baron of Rasay, commonly called "Garoc," on account of his extraordinary size and strength. He obtained a charter for his lands in 1648, and m. Janet, dau. of Sir Roderick Macleod, of Herries. This John Garoc was not only a man of most uncommon strength of body, in which he exceeded all his contemporaries, but a man of great spirit, merit, and resolution. He was a steady loyalist, inviolably attached to the cause of CHARLES I. and II. He was present at the battle of Worcester, when most of his men were cut off, and his brother Malcolm made prisoner. He received a full certificate from General Middleton, of his devotion to the royal cause, as also of his services rendered to it. He never complied with the usurper CROMWELL'S government. On the Restoration, John Garoc went to London, where he was most graciously received by CHARLES II., who shewed him many marks of favour and affection. Tradition says, CHARLES even went so far, as to restore to John Garoc, the Lewis, the old property of his family, and that the chief sailed from Rasay, with all his followers, and landed in Lewis, where he regained possession of the title-deeds, and other valuable family papers, which had remained in the hands of the Mackenzies since the time of Torquil Connanach. But, as he was sailing back in triumph to Rasay, a great storm arose, and he and all with him perished. Thus died John Garoc Macgillecallum, of whom many and marvellous tales are still told in every district of the Highlands, and whose name, in his own clan, is held in the highest esteem. That CHARLES ever restored him the Lewis requires confirmation, but it is certain that he and a large company were drowned in an awful tempest at sea, on their return from an expedition to the Lewis. He had no children by his wife, and after his death, the clan fell into great trouble. Alexander Macrae, of Inverinate, who had m. Janet, eldest dau. of Alexander, sixth Baron of Rasay, elder brother of John Garoc, tried to secure for his wife and her children the island of Rasay. This the clan would not allow, and both Janet and her younger sister, Julia, were obliged to sign a resignation for themselves and their heirs. Rasay then devolved upon

ALEXANDER MACLEOD, eighth Baron of Rasay, who was nephew of John Garoc, and next heir male. He obtained a charter, dated 19 August, 1692, for the lands, and was thereupon infeft. He m. Katherine, dau. of Sir Norman Macleod, of Bernera, by whom he had a son and heir,

MALCOLM MACLEOD, ninth Baron of Rasay, who s. his father about the year 1718. He m. Mary, dau. of Roderick Mackenzie, of Applecross, and by her had three sons, John, Murdoch, and Norman; and two daughters, Janet, and Flora. Malcolm was a firm adherent of the house of Stuart, and in 1745 joined the standard of Prince Charles, with many of his clan. He remained with the prince until after the fatal battle of Culloden, when he returned to Rasay. On his arrival, he found the Macleods of Dunvegan, who had espoused the cause of the house of Hanover, had burned his castle, carried off all the cattle on the island, and, in fact, almost ruined both himself and his people. Malcolm was now obliged to conceal himself, as he was surrounded by enemies. About this time Prince Charles, accompanied by two of the chief's sons, arrived in Rasay, where they remained in safety for some time. The prince afterwards went to Skye, and in somemonths landed safely in France. Malcolm was finally obliged to resign his lands to his eldest son,

JOHN MACLEOD, tenth Baron of Rasay. He m. Jane, dau. of Archibald Macqueen, Esq., and by her had issue,

Malcolm, major H. E. I. Co.'s Service, d. in 1821.

MACNAMARA OF AYLE.

MACNAMARA, PATRICK-JAMES-DILLON, Esq. of Ayle, co. Clare, b. 27 Sept. 1817; m. 17 March, 1842, Jane-Louise-Mary-Ann, only child of Capt. Grant, R.N., of Park Place, Stoke, co. Devon, and has a son, DILLON-TEMPLE-JOHN, b. 1 Aug. 1843.

Mr. Macnamara is a magistrate for co. Clare.

Lineage.

The pedigree of this very ancient Milesian family is deduced from CASSINUS, second son of CAS, King of Thomond, and younger brother of Blod, the ancestor of the illustrious house of O'Brien. His direct descendant, MEANMA, who commanded many troops against the Danes, especially in the memorable battle of Clontarf, in 1014, was father of CU-MARRA, or CON-MARRA, (heros maris,) who d. in 1099, and from whom is derived the surname Mac Conmara or Macnemara. His descendant, Mac Con Macnemara, elected Prince of Glancuillean in 1313, was ancestor of the Macnamaras, who were the ancient chiefs or princes of that part of the county of Clare which constitutes the baronies of Bunratty and Tullagh, and forms the western bank of the Shannon from Limerick to Killaloe. About the year 1370, the family was divided into two principal branches—MACNAMARA FINN, and MACNAMARA REAGH.

MACCON MACNAMARA, prince or chief of the whole district, had two wives, Hannah, dau. of O'Dwyer, of Tipperary, and Anne, dau. of O'Kelly, of Irnaine, in Roscommon; by the former he had SIODHA, or, as it is pronounced, SHEEDY MACNAMARA, on whom he settled West Clanaillean. He built the Abbey of Quin (in which is still the burial vault of the family) in 1402, and his son, MACCON, had a bull from the pope to enable him to instal certain friars minors therein. His descendants in the direct line were called MACNAMARA-FIONN, and had their chief dwelling in the castles of Cratellegh and Moyrisk. The immediate descendant, JOHN MACNAMARA-FIONN, left an only dau. and heir about 1660, who took a great part of the property out of the family. His two nephews, Donogh and Michael, followed the fortunes of King JAMES II., and went into the French service.

The junior branch, which had the castles of Moyrisk and Creevagh, kept those estates till very lately, when they were sold to Lord Fitzgerald and Vesci.

A branch resided at Ballynacraige Castle, of which Bartholomew Macnamara, son of Donogh, had a son, William, who, marrying Catherine, daughter and heir of Francis Sarsfield, of Doolen, co. Clare, obtained that estate, now possessed by WILLIAM-NUGENT MACNAMARA, Esq., knight of the shire for that county.

FINGIN or FLORENCE MACNAMARA, second son of Shiodha or Sheedy, before mentioned, had the estate of Rosroe, and lived at the Castle of Ranna. He was styled MACNAMARA OF ROSROE, and his eldest descendants in the male line. His great-grandson,

FINGIN or FLORENCE, d. 1 May, 1602, leaving, by Honora, his wife, dau. of Turlogh O'Brien, of Ballymacashel, a son, Shiodha. His great-grandson, TEIGUE or THADY MACNAMARA, raised a company of infantry for King JAMES II., with which he garrisoned the Castle of

Clare, and held secure till the capitulation of Limerick, in which he was included, and thus saved his estate. He removed his residence from the Castle of Ranna to that of Ayle, and dying without issue, was s. by his brother,

JOHN MACNAMARA, Esq., who had been an officer in the Spanish service. By his wife, a dau. of Burke, of Tiaquin, co. Galway, he had three sons,

THADY, his heir.
DENIS, of whom presently.
James, who s. to Ayle, under the will of his eldest brother. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of Stephen Creagh, Esq., and had three sons, Thady, John, and James, who all d. without issue. James, the youngest son, left the estate, by will, dated 1838, to the present possessor, JAMES-DILLON MACNAMARA, Esq.

The eldest son,

THADY MACNAMARA, Esq. of Ayle, d. s. p., and by his will, dated 1776, and proved in 1779, devised the estate of Ayle to his youngest brother, James, to the exclusion of his next brother,

DENIS MACNAMARA, Esq. This gentleman m. Miss Wilson, of the co. Clare, and had two sons, THADY and John, of whom the latter d. unm. The elder,

Westmeath, justice of the peace. The elder son,

This is a branch of the ancient Milesian family of Macnamara, of the co. Clare, (see preceding article,) which was resident at Ballynacraige Castle. Of this line was

BARTHOLOMEW MACNAMARA, Esq., son of Donogh, who was father of

WILLIAM MACNAMARA, Esq., who, marrying Catharine, dau. and heir of Francis Sarsfield, Esq. of Doolen, in the co. Clare, (of the distinguished house of Sarsfield of Lucan, of which was the gallant Sarsfield, Earl of Lucan, temp. JAMES II.) became possessed of that estate, and had a son and successor,

MACNEILL OF BARRA.

Macneill, Roderick, Esq. of Barra, in the shire of Inverness, Chief of the Macneills, m. 20 June, 1818, Isabella-Caroline, dau. of Charles Brownlow, Esq. of Lurgan, co. Armagh, and has an only child, Caroline-Elizabeth-Florence. Col. Macneill, who is a magistrate and deputy-lieut. for Invernesshire, s. his father in 1822.

Lineage.

The Macneils are a very ancient clan in the Western Isles of Scotland, and formed one of those who in ancient times followed the banner of the Lords of the Isles. Their chiefs, the Macneills of Bara, always ranked among the "Principes Insularum" who formed the council of the island monarch, and possessed the privilege of declaring his successor. Barra, with the neighbouring islands which constituted the dominion of this chief, has been in the family for upwards of four hundred years, although tradition assigns a much older date as the period of their occupancy.

The first of the Macneils of Barra who can be traced on record is Nigellus Oge, who obtained from Robert Bruce a charter of some lands in Kintyre. He had a son,

Murchard Macneil, who was succeeded by his son,

Roderick Macneil, who witnesses a charter by Donald, Lord of the Isles, to Hector Mac Gilleon, of Dowart, in 1409, in which he is styled "vir Nobilis." He married a dau. of Ferquhard Mac Gilleon, by whom he had several sons, the eldest of whom was Gilleownan Macneil, who had a charter in the reign of James I. from Alexander, Lord of the Isles, to "Gilleownan Roderici Muchardi Macneil," &c. of the island of Barra, and lands of Boisdale in the island of Uist. He was succeeded by his grandson,

Gilleownan, who obtained from James IV. a crown charter, confirming the grant made by the Lord of the Isles to his grandfather, dated 12 Aug. 1495. He was succeeded by his son, of the same name,

Gilleownan Macneil, of Barra, who took an active part in the various rebellions made in favour of the Lords of the Isles during the reign of James V. and regency of Mary of Guise. He had two sons,

i. Roderick, or Rorie Oge, his heir. ii. Gilleownan.

The elder,

Roderick Macneil, of Barra, a man of great resolution, was killed at the battle of Glenlivat, by a shot from a field-piece, on 3rd October, 1594. He left three sons, i. Roderick, his heir; ii. John; iii. Murdo. The eldest,

Roderick Macneil, of Barra, was twice married. By his first wife, a dau. of Maclean of Dowart, he had two sons, of whom the elder predeceased his father, and the second, Neill Og, became heir. By his second wife, a sister of the captain of Clanranald, he had a son, Neill Weyislache, who obtained from his brother the lands of Skirwal &c. in Barra. The elder surviving son,

Neil Macneil, of Barra, had three sons, i. Gillean, or John, his heir; ii. Hector; iii. Neil. The eldest,

John Macneil, of Barra, m. Catharine, dau. of the Captain of Clanranald, by whom he had two sons,

i. Roderick, his heir.
ii. John, who settled in Kintyre.

The elder,

Roderick Macneil, of Barra, obtained a crown charter of the estate of Barra, 10 Aug. 1688, and m. Isabella, eldest dau. of Sir Norman Macleod, of Bernera, by whom he had two sons,

i. Roderick, his heir. ii. James.

He was s. by the elder,

Roderick Macneil, of Barra, who m. Alice, second dau. of William Macleod, who was second son of Sir Norman Macleod, of Bernera, and had a son and successor,

MACONOCHIE OF MEADOWBANK.

iv. Anne Boswell. v. Harriet.

This distinguished lawyer, who s. his father, the late Allan Maconochie, Lord Meadowbank, in 1816, was for some time Sheriff of East Lothian, and sat in several parliaments. He filled the office of Solicitor-General for Scotland, and subsequently, before his elevation to the bench, became Lord Advocate.

Lineage.

The family of Campbell, alias Maconochie, of Inverawe, in Argyleshire, now of Meadowbank, descends from Sir Neil Campbell, of Lochow, the ancestor of the Ducal House of Argyle, by his second wife, a dau. of Sir John Cameron, of Lochiel. The eldest son of that marriage was Duncan Campbell, who got a grant of the estate of Inverawe and Cruachan from David II. A.D. 1330. His eldest son was named Dougal, after his mother's family, and Dougal's eldest son, Duncan, who, according to the Celtic custom, was patronymically Mc-Dowill Vc Conachie; he named his son also Duncan, who was thus Mc Conochie Vc Conochie, the son and grandson of Conochie or Duncan, and henceforth the patronymic appellation Maconochie came to be adopted by each succeeding chieftain of the family of Campbell of Inverawe, while the cadets still bore the name of Campbell. From the Campbells of Inverawe spring the Campbells of Shirwan, Kilmartin, and Cruachan.

In 1660, Dougall Campbell, or, as he was called, the MACONOCHIE of Inveraugh, joined in the rebellion of Argyle, in whose armament of the clan he held the rank of major, and was tried with the Marquess, in 1661, and attainted. He and his eldest son DUNCAN were soon afterwards executed at Carlisle. Duncan's eldest son, JAMES MACONOCHIE, who, at his father's death, was little more than nine years old, in 1680 succeeded in getting some compensation, together with the family residence in the city of Edinburgh, from his grand uncle Archibald, who, at the reversal of attainder, after his brother's death, got possession of the estate of Inverawe. With this money he purchased the property of MEADOWBANK, in Midlothian, which his descendant still possesses, and where, adopting the lowland customs, all the family took the name of Maconochie. James m. Mary Stewart, and was succeeded by his only son, ALEXANDER MACONOCHIE, of Meadowbank, who m. Isabella, dau. of Allan of Collintown, and was father of an only son, ALLAN MACONOCHIE, Lord Meadowbank, the very eminent and scientific judge. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of Andrew Wellwood, Esq. of Garvock, by Anne, his wife, eldest dau. of Sir George Preston, Bart. of Valleyfield, and had issue,

ALEXANDER, his heir.

Thomas-Tod.

Lord Meadowbank d. in 1816, and was s. by his son, the present ALEXANDER MACONOCHIE, of Meadowbank.

MACPHERSON OF CLUNY-MACPHERSON.

MACPHERSON, EWEN, of Cluny-Macpherson, co. Inverness, Chief of the Macphersons, and lineal descendant, in the male line, of the chiefs of the clan Chattan, b. 24 April, 1804; m. 20 Dec. 1832, Sarah-Justina, youngest dau. of the late Henry Davidson, Esq. of Tulloch Castle, in the shire of Ross, and has issue,

I. DUNCAN. II. Ewen-Henry-Davidson.
III. George-Gordon.
I. Caroline-Catherine.

Cluny-Macpherson, a capt. on half-pay, 42nd Royal Highlanders, s. his father 1 Aug. 1817, and is a magistrate and deputy-lieut. for the co. Inverness.

Lineage.

KENNETH MACPHERSON, living in the reign of ALEXANDER III., eldest son of Ewan Baan, second son of Murdoch, Parson of Kingousie, Captain of the clan Chattan, (see p. 806,) m. Isabel, dau. of Ferquhard Mackintosh, of Mackintosh, by whom he had two sons, I. DUNCAN, his heir, and II. Bean, or Benjamin, ancestor of the Macphersons of Brin, &c. The elder son,

DUNCAN MACPHERSON, of Clunie, lived in the reign of Robert Bruce; and being a man of a noble spirit, a steady loyalist, and particularly known to the king, obtained a commission from that great prince to reduce the Cumings and others his rebel subjects, in Badenoch, to obedience, which he performed so effectually, that he got a grant of large territorial tracts; and he had also, for his special services against the Cumings, a hand and dagger added to his armorial bearings, &c. He was s. by his son,

DONALD PHAOL MACPHERSON, of Clunie, called Donald Moir.

In the beginning of the reign of ROBERT II. there happened a bloody conflict between the Macphersons and the clan Cameron, at Invernahaven, in Badenoch, where the greatest part of the clan Cameron was killed on the spot; those who survived were taken prisoners, but Donald generously gave them all their liberty.

In this Donald's time the dissensions between the clan Chattan and the clan Kay ran so very high, that they took up the attention of the whole court. The king and the Duke of Albany sent the Earls of Crawford and of Murray (then two of the greatest men of the kingdom) to try to settle their differences, and, if possible, to effect a reconciliation, but all to no purpose. It was at last proposed that each clan should choose thirty of their own number to fight in the North Inch of Perth, with their broad-swords only, and thereby put an end to their disputes. The combat was cheerfully agreed to by both parties. They met accordingly on the day appointed, the king and an incredible number of the nobility and gentry being spectators. Prompted by old malice and inveterate hatred, they fought with inexpressible resolution and fury. Twenty-nine of the clan Kay were killed on the spot; the one who remained unhurt made his escape by swimming over the river Tay, and, it is said, was put to death by his own clan, when he came home, for not choosing to die in the field of honour with his companions, rather than save his life by flying.

Of the clan Chattan nineteen were killed in the field, and the other eleven so much wounded that none of them were able to pursue their single antagonist, who fled. This happened on the Monday before the feast of St. Michael, anno 1396; and the victory was adjudged in favour of the clan Chattan.

We must here observe, that the family of Clunie contend that the thirty combatants of the clan Chattan were all Macphersons; "because," say they, "their antagonists the clan Kay were followers of the Cumings of Badenoch, and envied the Macphersons the possession of their lands, which was the cause of their constant feuds."

The Macintoshes also allege, that these thirty were of their party, of the clan Chattan, and all Macintoshes.

MACQUARIE OF ORMAIG.

MACQUARIE, JOHN, Esq. of Ormaig, co. Argyll, b. in Sept. 1800; m. in Feb. 1826, Mary Campbell, and has issue.

Lineage.

The Macquaries first appear in possession of the island of Ulva, and part of Mull, and their situation forced them, at a very early period, to become dependent on the Macdonalds. But their descent from the clan Alpine, which has constantly been asserted by tradition, is established by an old MS. of the year 1450, which deduces their origin from Guaire or Godfrey, a brother of Fingon, ancestor of the Mackinnons, and Andrew, ancestor of the Macgregors. "The history of the Macquaires," continues Skene, in his valuable work on the Highland clans, "resembles that of the Mackinnons in many respects; like them, they had migrated far from the head-quarters of their race, they became dependent on the Lords of the Isles, and followed them as if they had been a branch of the clan." On the forfeiture of the last Lord of the Isles, they became, like the Mackinnons, in a manner independent, and although surrounded by various powerful clans, they maintained their station, which was that of a minor clan, without apparently undergoing any alteration; and survived many of the revolutions of fortune to which the greater clans were exposed.

Lineage.

The tribe of which this family is the head, is known in the Highlands as the clan Revan, and is of great antiquity, being originally of the Macdonalds, Lords of the Isles; the connexion with whom, after a separation of more than three centuries, was recognised, so recently as 1778, by Alexander, Lord Macdonald, who having raised a Highland regiment, conferred the commission of lieutenant on a son of Donald Macqueen, of Corrybrough, intimating his appointment by letter, dated 26 Jan. 1778, (now in possession of the Macqueens,) in which his lordship thus writes: "It does me great honour to have the sons of chieftains in the regiment, and as the Macqueens have been invariably attached to our family, to whom I believe we owe our existence, I am proud of the nomination."

Early in the 15th century, Roderick Dhu Revan M'Sweene, or Macqueen, quitted the Isles on receiving a grant of territory, including amongst others the lands of Corrybrough, since which period his descendants have formed a branch of the powerful clan Chattan, under whose standard they fought at the battle of Harlawe in 1411. The other families of Macqueen are branches of this clan, the chieftainship being vested in Macqueen of Corrybrough as lineal representative of Roderick Dhu Revan.—See Shaw's History of Province of Moray, page 97; Documents in possession of Mackintosh of Mackintosh, chief of clan Chattan; also the public records in the Register House, Edinburgh, where this family is entered in the Land Register of Scotland, from 1563, downwards.

DONALD MACQUEEN s. his father, Donald, in 1594. On 4 April, 1609, he signed, as chieftain of his tribe, a bond of manrent, or indenture of friendship, between Angus Mackintosh, head of the clan Chattan, and the principal tribes composing it. By this instrument, the chieftains of the different tribes bound themselves, as a confederation, to support and adhere to Mackintosh, as their captain and leader; each tribe, however, retaining its own surname and chieftain. At this period the tribe of Macqueen comprehended twelve distinct families, returned in pursuance of statute, as landowners in the counties of Inverness and Nairne.

Lineage.

The name Madden, or O'Maddin, is among those which claim descent from the Milesian colonizers of Ireland. The titular Bishop of Ossory, BURKE, in his Hibernia Dominicana, p. 305, (Ed. 1762,) says, that "the very ancient family of the O'Maddins has descended in a direct line from Heremon, third son of Milesius, King of Spain." He also states, as do ancient records, that the O'Maddens were dynasts of that part of the county of Galway now called the Barony of Longford. The same testimony is borne by O'Brien, Roman-catholic Bishop of Cloyne, in his Irish Dictionary, published in 1768, (p. 468, Ed. 1832,) who agrees with Dr. Burke, as also with Keating, in deducing this family, together with the O'Kelly, Maguire, and M'Neachten (Norton), from the third son of Milesius. Camden states that, in his day, the O'Maiden or O'Maddens were among the original septs of the co. Galway, and there is an ancient pedigree of the family in the College of Arms, Dublin, in which its Milesian origin is traced. (See the Annals of Hy-Many, published by the Irish Archæological Society.) We do not pretend that we can produce documentary evidence to prove the descent of this family from the Milesian stock of Galway, but such descent is presumed, 1. on the authority of the before-quoted Roman-catholic bishop, Burke, who asserts it; 2. on the similarity of names, the name Hugh, (in Irish, Aodh,) with which this pedigree opens, being of very common occurrence in the ancient pedigrees already referred to, which comes down to the earlier part of the seventeenth century; and 3. on the similarity of the armorial bearings, for it can be proved that the arms borne by this family are similar in their leading characters to those borne by the O'Maddin in the time of Queen ELIZABETH. How the family became settled in England, is as difficult to be explained as it is how other confessedly Irish names have settled there; but it is easy to suppose that the superior wealth of England ever presented an inducement to younger sons of Irish families; and we know, historically, that Irish troops were more than once found useful in the sister island. Some of the undoubted descendants of the original stock still reside in the county of Galway.

HUGH MADDEN, of Bloxham Beauchamp, Oxfordshire, Gent., was father of THOMAS MADDEN, of the same place, whose eldest son,

JOHN MADDEN, also of the same place, had issue,

I. Thomas, of the Inner Temple London, where he was buried, having died unm., in July, 1677. Gwillim gives his arms, but an erroneous descent. Rousky Castle, named by Gwillim, as his residence, was near Manor Waterhouse, where a village of the same name still is found.

Kinaston of Oteley Park.

The family of Kynaston, distinguished alike by antiquity of descent, high alliances, and historic name, descends from Iorwerth Goch, Lord of Mochnant, in Powysland, and through him, from the Royal Line of Powys, from which sprung OWEN GLENDOWER; the Hughes's of Gwerclas, Barons of Kymmer-yn-Edeirnion; Rhys's, Lords of Rûg; Vaughans of Nannau, Baronets; Davies's of Gwysaney; Davies's, now of Eton House, Kent; Edwards's of Ness Strange; Lloyds of Aston, and Vaughans, Earls of Carbery.

Referring to the article "HUGHES OF GWERCLAS" for early details, we shall commence with

MEREDITH AP BLEDDYN, Prince of Powys, who d. in 1132. He m. twice. By his first wife, Hunydd, dau. of Efnydd Gwernwy, Lord of Duffryn Clwyd, in Denbighland, (see MEREDITH OF PENTRE-VYCHAN,) Meredith had, with other issue, a son and successor, MADOC AP MEREDITH, ancestor of OWEN GLENDOWER, the HUGHES'S OF GWERCLAS, Barons of Kymmer-yn-Edeirnion, and other distinguished houses. He m. 2ndly, Efa, dau. of Blettrws, a chieftain of Ysceifiog, derived from Ednowain Bendew, Lord of Tegaingle, in Flint, Founder of the XIIIth Noble Tribe of North Wales and Powys, and had a son,

SIR GRIFFITH VYCHAN, of Caehowel, in the parish of Kinnerley, co. Salop, a Knight of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, and Lord of Crugion and Bergedwyn, in Montgomeryshire. Sir Griffith was called by his countryman, "Y Marchog gwyllt o' Cae Hywel," that is, "The Wild Knight of Cae Howel," from his romantic life, and his residence of this name. He m. Matilda, dau. and sole heir of Iorwerth Gôch ap Griffith Gôch, descended from Cadivor ap Dinawal, Lord of Castel Dinawal, in Cardiganshire, (see LLOYD OF DANNYRALLT) and had three sons, GRIFFITH VYCHAN, Howell, and Iorwerth Vychan, who m. and had issue. JOHN KYNASTON, Esq., (in consequence of the part acted by his father against HENRY IV.,) we have no record, except that he received a pardon from the English monarch, and was father of

In the year 1414, Sir Duncan Campbell,* knight of Lochow, granted to REGINALD MALCOLM, laird of Corbarran, certain lands in Craignish and on the banks of Loch Avich, with the office of hereditary constable of his castles of Lochaffy and Craignish. This family, which seem soon after to have declined, appears to have been a branch of that of Poltalloch, from the circumstance that the farm of Corbarran, or Corran, then the only remaining portion of their possessions, is said to have been bequeathed by the last of this race, to Zachary, the then proprietor of Poltalloch, as his chief or representative of the elder branch of his house.

DONALD M'GILLESPIE VIC O'CHALLUM, or Donald, son of Archibald, son of Malcolm, was seised of the lands of Poltalloch, A.D. 1562, as appears from a charter bearing date 18 May in that year. He m. Grizell, dau. of Stirling of Kippendavie, and had a son,

In 1687, we find him addressed as Laird of Poltalloch and baillie of Glasrie in a writ directed to him out of chancery for holding an inquest for ascertaining the value of the lands of Otter, then confiscated by JAMES II. He purchased the property of Knockalin, with the proceeds, it is said, of the farm of Corbarran, or Corran, left to him, as before stated, by Malcolm, of Corbarran. ---

* Sir Archibald Campbell, Knight of Lochow, in 1372, had two sons, Colin, surnamed Jongaloch, or the Wonderful, and Duncan. Duncan was fostered and brought up by the clan Challum, or M'Callums of Ariskeodnish, in the parish of Kilmartin, who, in order that the estate might devolve upon their foster-child, Duncan, set fire to the house in the town of Kilmartin, in which his elder brother, Colin, was passing the night. The latter was obliged to fly, clothed in complete armour, but before he could effect his escape, and force his way out, his coat of mail had become so heated by the flames, that he was compelled to jump into a pool, formed by the windings of the river Skeodnish, which flows at the foot of the eminence on which Kilmartin stands, which pool is pointed out by the Highlanders to this day, and called in Gaelic, Linna Licrach, or the Pool of the Coat of Mail.

† A battle took place 25 May, A.D. 1647, at Ederline, where Alaster and his men fought with their accustomed bravery. Among the most conspicuous men on the parliamentary side was Zachary Uad Donald More, of Poltalloch, famed for his great strength, and skill in the use of the broadsword. In the heat of the engagement Alaster met Donald, when he exclaimed, "You once made me your guest; yield, and this night be mine." "Let either of us gain the day," was Poltalloch's answer, as he rushed on his foe. Alaster was losing ground, when some of his men came behind and cut Poltalloch in the leg. The hero fell upon his knee, and M'Col turned away, as assuming him no longer worthy of his attention. It is alleged, that after all, Poltalloch slew seven of his assailants before he was himself killed.—Chambers' Edinburgh Journal, vol. iv., p. 373.

Lineage.

This family, one of the most ancient of the landed gentry of England, is mentioned in "Holinshed's Chronicles" as amongst the number of those who came over with WILLIAM the Conqueror, and the name is included in "the Roll of Battle Abbey." The records and pedigree commence in the year 1157, and have been continued without interruption to the present time. The head of the family in the reign of HENRY II. (1157,)

ROGER MANLEY, was seated at Manley, in Cheshire, where his descendants continued to reside for many centuries, and are often mentioned in the histories of that county, as having filled the office of sheriff in the reign of EDWARD III. and in many subsequent reigns. About the year 1520, the Manleys removed from Cheshire to Erbistock, in Denbighshire, and resided there for about two hundred years, on a property which still belongs to the family; but the old hall, having become dilapidated, is now converted into a farm house.

In the reign of JAMES I., SIR RICHARD MANLEY (who is mentioned in "the Life of Lord Clarendon") was controller of the household to Henry, Prince of Wales, and a member of the board of Green Cloth.

JOHN DE MARSHAM was living at Marsham. He d. in 1325, and was s. by his son,

THOMAS DE MARSHAM, who bore for arms, "a chevron between a mullet and crescent in chief, and a crosslet in base." His son and heir,

ROBERT DE MARSHAM, was the first of the family that settled at Stratton. By Katherine, his wife, he left a son,

Lineage.

The family of Martyn is of Norman descent, and of considerable antiquity in the co. Leicester.

In early times, its ancestors resided at Leicester, and frequently held the highest offices in that ancient and important borough. In the years 1333, 1338, and 1364, John Martyn was mayor of Leicester, and was also (temp. EDWARD III.) returned member of parliament twice for the borough. Shortly afterwards the family held possessions at Anstey, anciently called Hanstigie, or Anstige, in the co. Leicester, which they have ever since possessed, and where they have resided to the present time.

25th HENRY VI., A.D. 1447, John Martyn held the estate at Anstey, and was witness to a grant of certain lands lying in the fields of Anstey, "in Wolfdale," by John de Leverych, of Leicester, for the repair of the church, bridges, &c., of Anstey, and of which land the family of Martyn, with others, have ever since been the trustees. He was s. by his son, Thomas Martyn, who, about the year 1490, in conjunction with William Haket, (they being the wardens of the chapel of Anstey,) gave and demised the "Brereyard," in Anstey aforesaid, to the same purposes as the above bequest, of which they were trustees. He left a son, Thomas Martyn, who resided at Anstey, and was the father of Robert Martyn, who m. in 1588, Bridget Marshall. He purchased part of the property of the abbot and convent of St. Mary de Pratis, at Leicester, lying in Anstey, which remained in the crown till 1 July, 1609, when it was conveyed in fee simple to the above Robert Martyn, and others. He had one brother, Thomas Martyn, who, with others, had a lease of thirty-one years of "Anstey Pastures," an extra-parochial liberty, situate near Anstey, from Queen ELIZABETH. The present seat of the family is at Anstey Pastures; the old residence, an ancient house in the village of Anstey, being rendered unfit from age.

ROBERT MARTYN, who purchased Anstey Pastures, was the elder brother† of Thomas Martyn, who d. s. p., and was buried at Anstey, 1594. Lineage.

The early descent of the MASSIES of Coddington has long been a matter of dispute, some of the pedigrees deriving them from a younger son of Sir John Massie, of Tatton, supposed to have been slain at Shrewsbury, whose eldest son d. 8th HENRY V.; and others from Hamon, son of Sir John Massie, of Puddington, who also fell at the battle of Shrewsbury.

HUGH MASSIE settled at Coddington, in consequence of his marriage with Agnes, dau. and heiress of Sir Nicholas Bold, of Coddington, great-grandson of John, third son of Sir John Bold, of Bold, in Lancashire. Hugh had (with four daus., Anne, m. to David Dod, Esq. of Edge; Alice, m. to Robert Tatton, Esq. of Withenshaw; Maud, the wife of Thomas Cottingham, Esq. of Wirral; and Margaret, of Philip Aldersey, Esq., of Middle Aldersey) several sons, of whom the third,

He m. Alice, dau. and heiress of Adam Woton, of Edgerley and Chester, and by her, who m. 2ndly, Hugh Ball, of Coddington, had two sons, viz., MORGAN, of Eggerley, ancestor of the MASSIES OF EGGERLEY, and JOHN. The fifth son, Edward, was one of the most distinguished military leaders during the civil wars of the reign of CHARLES I. General Massie, of whom a fine portrait is still preserved at Pool Hall, the seat of his collateral descendant, d. in Ireland, s. p., and was interred at Abbey Leix.*

The eldest surviving son and heir,

MASSINGBERD OF GUNBY.

ALGERNON, R.N., b. 11 Sept. 1828.

Lineage.

This family, whose name has been written Massyngberde, Massingbergh, and Massingberd, is traced to the time of EDWARD I., when its patriarch, LAMBERT MASSINGBERD, resided at Sutterton. His great-grandson, THOMAS MASSYNGBERDE, living in 1434, m. Juliana, dau. and co-heir of Thomas Bernak, Esq., and was father of ROBERT MASSYNGBERDE, Esq., who m. Agnes, dau. and sole heir of Robert Halliday, Esq. of Burgh, and dying 38 HEN. VI., was s. by his son, RICHARD MASSYNGBERDE, who m. Maud, dau. of Thomas Kyme, Esq., and was s. by his eldest son,

SIR THOMAS MASSINGBERD, Knt., who m. Joan, younger dau. and heir (her elder sister, Agnes, was Prioress of the nunnery of Crabhouse, in Norfolk) of John Braytoft, of Braytoft Hall, and, receiving with her a considerable estate, made that seat his chief place of residence. Surviving his wife, Sir Thomas became, in the reign of HENRY VIII., a knight of St. John of Jerusalem, and added the second escutcheon to the family arms. He had issue,

I. AUGUSTINE, who purchased, in 1538, the manors belonging to Sir John Markham, in Braytoft and elsewhere. He m. Margaret, dau. of Robert Elrington, Esq. of Hoxton, in Middlesex, and dying in the lifetime of his father, 7 Feb. 1549, left, with five daus., four sons, 1. THOMAS, successor to his grandfather; 2. William, whose grandson, John, an eminent merchant of London, and treasurer of the East India Company, m. Cecilia, dau. of Thomas Pellit, merchant, of London, and dying in 1653, left two daus., his co-heirs, ELIZABETH, m. to George, first Earl Berkeley, and MARY, m. to Robert, third Earl of Lindsey; 3. II. Oswald (Sir), Knt. of St. John of Jerusalem, grand prior of Ireland, and afterwards "Turcopollier of Malta," an office which belonged of right to the chief knight of the English language. His appointment as grand prior of Ireland by Cardinal Pole, 2 PHILIP and MARY, is recorded by Sir James Ware, in his "Annales Hiberniæ;" and in the work of the Abbè de Vertot on the Knights of Malta, he is mentioned as "Dernier Turcopolier." In some papers which appeared in an early Number of the "British Magazine," extracted from MS. documents still extant in the Knights' Library at Malta, the name of Sir Oswald Massingberd occurs frequently, and it appears with those of the first occupants of Malta under the illustrious De l'Isle Adam, after their expulsion from Rhodes. He would seem, therefore, to have been one of the survivors of that famous siege.

He was subsequently employed, at the peace of Amiens, on a special diplomatic mission to the Emperor Napoleon, respecting the ceded West Indian Islands.

Lineage.

No more convincing evidence of the statement, that the most ancient and historical descents are to be found among the gentry of England, can be adduced than the annals of this ancient family, (here given in a very abbreviated form,) which all genealogical writers and various of the Harleian MSS. concur in deriving from AEDDAN, Lord of Grosmont Castle, in Monmouthshire, whom Lluyd, in his "Royal Tribes," states to have been the fifth son of Gwaethvoed the Great, Prince of Cardigan and Gwent, head of one of the royal British tribes.

SIR MADOC AP CARADOC, Lord of Grosmont, 8th in lineal descent from Aeddan, was an eminent leader of the crusaders, and was instituted a knight of the celebrated order of the St. Sepulchre. His son,

SIR IEVAN AP GRYFFYTH, 9th Lord of Grosmont, m. Cecily, dau. and heir of Sir Robert de Clare, who was second son of Richard, 4th Earl of Hertford, (by Amicia, his wife, dau. and co-heir with her sister Isabel, wife of King JOHN, to William, Earl of Gloucester,) and a descendant of the sister of King WILLIAM the Conqueror.

SIR MATHEW AP IEVAN, their grandson, m. Janet, sole heir of Sir Jenkyn Fleming, of Llandaff, co. Glamorgan, of which place his descendants were long deemed feudal barons, receiving summonses, as barons, to attend the sovereign with horse and arms, on various occasions.

SIR DAVID MATHEW, of Llandaff, eldest son of the foregoing, was one of the most distinguished men of his age, and was made Grand Standard-Bearer of England by King EDWARD IV., whose life he is said to have saved (though he was far advanced in years) at the battle of Towton, on Palm Sunday, 1461. His tomb, ornamented with his full-length figure in alabaster, in St. Mary's Chapel, of the venerable Cathedral of Llandaff, (which has ever since been the property and burial-place of the family of Mathew) is one of the most interesting extant monuments of that time. An accurate description of the various monuments of the family in this chapel may be found in Willis's Cathedral of Llandaff, in the British Museum. Sir David Mathew left, by Gwendaline, his wife, dau. of Sir George Herbert, Knt. of Chappell, seven sons, from whom the various subsequent branches of this family derived,†

I. Reinborn, Lord of Llandaff, who m. Eliza, dau. of Sir Maurice Denys, Knt. of Asterton, co. Gloucester, and his descendants continued at Llandaff, until the decease s.p. at Bath, in 1820, of Thomas Mathews, Esq. of Llandaff Court, (only son of the ill-used and gallant Admiral Mathews, M.P. for the co. of Glamorgan.)

II. Jenkyn, killed at Cowbridge by the men of Brecknock.

III. DAVID, of Trevor and Llewenny, co. Denbigh, of whom presently.

IV. William, left issue, William and David.

V. JOHN, m. Catherine Kemeys, of Cefn Mabley, and had issue, Janet, who m. Sir T. Morgan, of Tredegar, and left Sir T.-Mathew Morgan; and Elizabeth, m. to John, seventh Baron Clinton, ancestor to the Dukes of Newcastle, and to the extant Lords Clinton.

VI. Robert, of Castle Menych, who m. Maude, dau. of Thomas ap Howell, Lord of Brecknock. His immediate descendant, Thomas, (M.P. co. Glamorgan,) appears in Peter Le Neve's MSS., together with David Mathew, of Llandaff, as one of the Knights of the proposed Order of the Royal Oak, in 1661; Cecil, dau. and heir to his grandson, Charles Mathews, of Hensol and Castle Menych, (by Cecil, only dau. and heir to the celebrated loyalist, Judge Jenkyns,) m. Charles Talbot, Lord Chancellor of England, (great-grandfather to the present Earl Talbot,) who was created, in 1733, Baron Talbot, of Hensol, co. Glamorgan. Younger sons of this branch became seated at Upton Grey and Alton, co. Hants, and at Stansted Park, co. Sussex. Of this latter line, Henry, m. Anne, dau. and heir of the Hon. Stanislaus Browne, brother to Viscount Montagu; and his son, Francis, about the year 1755, settled in Spain, where he left a numerous issue. The great-grandson of Maurice Mathew, of Roos, second son of Robert, of Castle Menych, Tobias Mathew, Lord Archbishop of York, ranks deservedly among the most eminent English prelates. His Grace d. 29 March, 1628, and his son, Sir Toby Mathew, M.P. for St. Albans, d. unm., in 1655.

VII. Thomas, m. Catherine, sole dau. and heir of Morgan ap Ievan, Lord of the Ader, (or Radyr,) descended from Iestyn ap Gurgant, tributary Prince of Glamorgan, and had issue, (with one dau., Janet, m. 1st, to Sir Rhys ap Thomas, Knight of the Garter, ancestor to the noble families of Pembroke and Powys, and 2ndly, to Sir T. Stradling, of St. Donat's Castle,) five sons, the eldest of whom, Sir William Mathew, of Radyr, was knighted by King HENRY VII., under the banner of England, on the field of Bosworth, 22 Aug. 1485; George, eldest son of Edmond Mathew, of Radyr, m. in 1620, his first cousin, Mary, dau. of Sir T. Poyntz, of Acton, co. Gloucester, widow of James, Viscount Thurles, and mother of James, first Duke of Ormond, and settled in Ireland. His descendants became extinct at the decease of Francis Mathew, Viscount Mathew, and Earl of Llandaff, K.P., without issue, 12 March, 1833. Younger sons of the family of Mathew of Radyr were for a time seated at Linton, co. Hereford, and at Berkeswell, co. Warwick, and from thence at Bonnetstown and Blanchfield, co. Kilkenny.

The third son,

DAVID MATHEW, of Trevor and Llewenny, co. Denbigh, m. Anne, dau. of Sir H. Myddleton, and had issue, Edward, of Llewenny, and

JENKYN MATHEW, who, according to the Visitation of Devon, m. Lucia, dau. and sole heir of William Starkey, brother to Sir Humphrey Starkey, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and assumed her coat of arms in the first quarter. His son,

JOHN MATHEW, left issue, by Agnes, dau. of William Gamage, Esq., second son of Sir Walter Gamage, two sons, JOHN, of St. Kew, co. Cornwall, and Edmond, of Dodbroke, co. Devon, who m. 1st, Alice, dau. and heiress of J. Risbye, of Cornwall, and 2ndly, Anne, dau. and heir of Sir Tristram Pyne, of Upton Pyne, co. Devon, by whom he had issue, Edmond, who by his wife, Anne, dau. of Sir T. Parker, of North Molton, Knt., (ancestor of the Earls of Morley,) left James, of Dodbroke, who m. Ursula, dau. of Sir John Courtenay, of Molland, and continued at that place, a branch of the family which is now believed to be extinct.

JOHN MATHEW, (the elder brother of Edmond,) became

* Lady Lyttelton and Westcote was co-heir (with her sister, Mary, wife of the Hon. R.-F. Greville, ambassador to the Germanic Diet, at Ratisbon) to the ancient family of Macartney, descended maternally from co-heirs of the Cootes, Lords Colooney, and the Aungiers, Earls of Longford. Her ladyship's only son, George, Lord Lyttelton, having deceased unm. 12 Nov. 1828, Mrs. Mathew became co-heir and representative of these ancient families.

† The name appears in modern times to have been indiscriminately spelt Mathew or Mathews, (i. e., ap, or son of.) From wills, monumental inscriptions, &c., the name appears invariably to have been, in every branch, spelt without the s, (or son,) up to 1559. Generally, it may be observed, that after that date, the junior branches of the family, who remained in Wales, changed the "ap" for the s, after the name.

The only other families of the name entitled to bear arms appear to have been, 1. Mathew, of Braddon, Northamptonshire, derived from John Mathew, lord mayor of London, temp. RICHARD III., who bore, Gyronny of eight, sable and gules, a lion, rampant, or, within a bordure, az., semée of cross-crosslets, or; 2. Mathews, of Blodwall, co. Salop, whose heir m. Sir J. Newport, grandfather to the Earl of Bradford; 3. Mathews, of Gobins, Essex, descended from Phillip Mathews, of Brabant, (extinct baronets,) bore, Gu., three catherine wheels, arg.; 4. Roger Mathew, M.P. for Dartmouth in 1635, (a natural son,) by grant, (in the British Museum,) Az., three lions, rampant, arg., on a chief of the last, as many crosses-crosslets, sa.

seated by marriage at Pennytenny, in St. Kew, co. Cornwall, and was s. at that place by his son, William Mathew, who m. 1st, Emmeline, dau. of Sir R. Rous, (by Elizabeth, dau. and heir of Sir E. Mervyn, of Fonthill, a co-heir to the ancient Barony of Latymer,) and 2ndly, Mary, dau. of J. Vivian, of Trenouth. William Mathew m. 3rdly, Philippa, dau. and sole heir of Richard Tresungher, of Tresungher, Esq., and relict of J. Lynar.

William Mathew, of Pennytenny, in St. Kew, and of Tresungher, in St. Endellyon, co. Cornwall, (grandson of William, of Pennytenny, and Emmeline Rous,) m. Sibylla, dau. and heir of John Roscarrock, of Roscarrock, M.P., co. Cornwall, (one of the most ancient families in the county,) lady in waiting to the Queen, and was father of

Sir John Mathew, of Tresungher and Pennytenny, who took an active part with his relatives, Sir Richard and Sir Bevil Grenville, in the civil wars of the West of England. He rebuilt, in 1663, the present castellated mansion of Tresungher, which had been totally destroyed in the war. He m. Mary, dau. of John Vivian, of Trewan, Esq., M.P., (of the family of the celebrated John Vivian, Prior of Bodmin,) and was grandfather of Mary Bond, who carried the estate of Tresungher with herself, in marriage, to Charles Vyvyan, Esq., second son of Sir R. Vyvyan, of Trelowarren, but other estates, and the representation of the family, devolved upon her cousin,

Colonel Abednego Mathew, (son of William, of Pennytenny, by Anne, his wife, dau. of Sir W. Parsons, of Black Torrington, co. Devon, and grandson of Nicholas Mathew, Esq. of Tregeldvon, second son of the above-mentioned William Mathew, of Tresungher.*) Colonel Mathew was Governor of St. Christopher's, in which island, and in Antigua, he received grants of lands, now possessed by the family, as some compensation for the great losses they had sustained by the civil wars. Colonel Mathew d. 8 April, 1681, aged 52, leaving issue by his wife, Susanna Sparrow, an heiress, I. Charles, who d. s. p.; II. Thomas, who d. s. p.; and III. William. The third son,

William Mathew, entering at an early age (in 1679) in the Coldstream regiment, raised by his relative, General Monk, (Duke of Albemarle,) was highly distinguished in the various actions of the subsequent war. According to the history of the services of this gallant corps, he was severely wounded at Neerwinden, and was promoted to the command of the regiment at Namur.† He was an equerry to her Majesty, and went out in command of the brigade of Guards in the expedition to Spain, under the Earl of Ormonde, in 1702. The following year he was made a knight of the Bath, and in 1704 was appointed Captain-general and Lord High Admiral of the Windward and Leeward Islands, and d. at the seat of government in Antigua the following year. General Sir William Mathew m. Catherine, Baroness Van Leemputt, of Holland,‡ maid of honour to her Majesty Queen Mary, and left issue (with two younger sons, Abednego and Edward, who d. in 1710 and 1712, without issue, and a dau., Louise, m. to W.-Pym Burt, Esq., Chief Justice of the Leeward Islands) a son,

William Mathew, Esq., who entered the Coldstream-guards, in 1700, and served with distinction at the battle of Almanza, in 1707, at Almirura, in 1710, and on various other occasions. General Mathew received a sword of honour, and was equerry to King George I. He was appointed Governor-general of the Leeward Islands in 1735, and d. in Antigua, 14 August, 1753, having held this important office upwards of seventeen years. A short time previous to his decease, General Mathew had been informed, that it was his Majesty's gracious intention to reward his very long services, and the severely-tried loyalty of his family, by the creation of a baronetcy, (an honour which had been bestowed on his predecessor in the same government, Sir W. Codrington,) but the account of his Excellency's death having reached England at the same time with his grateful acceptance of this mark of his sovereign's approbation, the patent did not receive his Majesty's signature, and we believe the honour has never been claimed by his family. His Excellency m. 1st, Anne, dau. and sole heir of Lieutenant-General Hill, Governor-general of the Leeward Islands, brother to Lady Masham, and first cousin to Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, and had one son, William; he m. 2ndly, Anne, dau. and heir of M. Smith, Esq., Lieut. Governor of the island of Nevis; and 3rdly, Margaret, dau. of Isaac Garnier, Esq. of London, by Margaret, his wife, sister to George, first Lord Carpenter, General of her Majesty's forces, and left issue,

MAUDE OF MOOR HOUSE.

Maude, John, Esq. of Moor House, near Wakefield, co. York, b. in 1772, a magistrate and deputy-lieut. of the West Riding. Mr. Maude, who was educated at Hanau on the Mayne, spent several years (from 1793 to 1803) in the United States of America, and published an interesting work at Wakefield, in 1826, under the title of "A Visit to the Falls of Niagara," in 1800, with descriptive engravings from drawings by himself.

Lineage.

The family of Maude was established in England by Eustace de Monte Alto, surnamed the Norman Hunter, one of the soldiers of the Conquest, in the immediate train of the Palatine Earl of Chester, the potent Hugh Lupus, from whom, in requital of his gallant services, Monte Alto obtained the lordships of Montalt and Hawarden, in the co. Flint, places still designating a branch of his descendants, the noble house of Maude, Viscounts Hawarden and Barons of Montalt.

Andomar, or Aylmer de Montalt, who founded the Yorkshire and only surviving line of the family, was great-great-grandson of Eustace, and youngest brother of Robert de Montalt, Baron de Montalt, by tenure, temp. Henry II., from whom derived the celebrated Robert de Montalt, who was summoned to parliament from 27th Edward I. to 13th Edward III., but d. s. p. Andomar de Montalt, accompanying in 1174 the expedition against William the Lion, had the good fortune to make the Scottish monarch prisoner by surprise; and conveying the royal captive to Henry II., then at Falaise, that prince granted to him, instead of his ancient ensigns, "a lion, gu., (the lion of Scotland,) debruised by two bars, sa.," to denote captivity.* His son and heir, Robert de Montalt, inherited West Riddlesden, and the other estates of his cousin, Richard de Montalt, son of Simon, second son of Ralph, 4th Baron de Montalt, grandson of Eustace, the Norman.

Constantine Monhaull, or Maude, of West Ryddylsden, living at the close of the 15th century, seventh in descent from Robert, was great-grandfather of

Christopher Maude, Esq. of Holling Hall and Woodhouse, Patron of Ilkley, in 1554, whose eldest brother, Arthur Mowhaut, or Maude, proved, at Glover's Visitation, in 1585, his descent from the Maudes of West Ryddlesden, and had his right to their arms allowed. Christopher left at his decease (his will bears date 1561) a dau., Isabel, m. to William Currer, Esq. of Marley, two sons, Thomas Maude, of West Riddlesden, ancestor of the Viscounts Hawarden, (see Burke's Peerage,) and

* In 1827, Mr. Maude of Moor House, visited West Riddlesden Hall, the ancient seat of the family of Montealto, Montalto, or Maude, and copied from stained glass in the staircase-window, a very old and curious heraldic representation of the arms, "the lion debruised by the bars," surmounted with the letters—RTHUR DE MAHAU—(the first letter A being cut off by the leading as well as the final T.)

and a son and heir, JOHN MAUDE, Esq. of Alverthorpe Hall and Lotherton, commonly called "Lawyer Maude," b. in 1683, who m. 1st, Elizabeth, only child of William Dodd, citizen of London; 2ndly, Frances Parthericke, an heiress; and 3rdly, Anne, dau. of Sir Michael Wentworth, Knt. of Woolley, and relict, 1st, of Sir Lion Pilkington, Bart. of Chevet; and 2ndly, of Sir Charles Dalston, Bart. of Heath. I. ROBERT, of Hilton, who was appointed serjeant-at-law, in 1547. Upon the decease of his younger brother, Henry, he disputed the sanity of that gentleman's mind at the time of making his will. He m. Mary, dau. of Thomas Pudsey, of Barforth, in the co. of York, and dying in 1563, was found, by inquisition, taken at York Castle, the same year, to have deceased, possessed of the manors of Hilton, Normanby, Hawnby, &c. He was s. by his eldest son, ROGER, of Hilton, Hawnby, &c., b. in 1539, who m. Jane, dau. of Sir Christopher Danby, Knt. by Elizabeth, dau. of Richard Neville, Lord Latimer, and had a son and heir, EDMUND, of Hilton, who m. Thomasine, dau. of Ralph Tancred, Esq., and dying, in 1615, left a son and successor, CHARLES, of Hilton, &c., who sold his estates of Hawnby and Normanby, to James Morley, Esq., one of the six clerks in chancery. In 1556, he purchased lands in Scrooton of Sir Thomas Nevil, having previously, in conjunction with his brother Henry, acquired from William and John Sewster, Esqrs., all their lands in

He d. in 1612, when he was found, by inquisition, to have died without issue. His dau. Isabella, wife of James Danby, of Scruton, in the co. of York, fourth son of Sir Christopher Danby, must have been dead, probably issueless.

Margaret, m. to Sampson Trollop, Esq. of Eden Dean, in Durham.

Roger Meynell, having joined, in 1569, the insurrection of the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, was indicted of treason before Thomas Ratcliffe, Earl of Sussex, Lord President of the council in the North, but obtained a pardon from Queen ELIZABETH, dated 13th of her reign; notwithstanding which, part of his lands were confiscated to the crown. He d. in 1591, and was s. by his elder son,

THOMAS MEYNELL, Esq. of North Kilvington, b. in 1564. This gentleman, one of the victims of religious persecution, was committed in 1600, as a recusant, to the Blockhouse, at Hull, and in the following year imprisoned in York Castle. He obtained, however, in 1604, a general pardon under the great seal of JAMES I., and in 1626 another from King CHARLES. He m. 1st, Winefred, dau. of Thomas Pudsey, Esq. of Barforth, co. Ann, m. to Thomas Grange, Esq. of Harsley, in Yorkshire.

* According to other accounts, the second wife of Anthony Meynell was Catherine, dau. of Mr. Francis Howton, of Middlethorpe.

† This John Meynell dying intestate, administration of his effects was granted to Stephen Kirk, of Thornton-le-street, yeoman, 16th Sept. 1690. The account of his funeral expenses, which is still preserved, states that two hundred and eighty-eight gallons of ale, and an equally amazing quantity of cakes and biscuits, were consumed. The total cost was paid out of the effects of the deceased, by his uncle, Major John Talbot, of Wood End, who, upon the demise of his nephew, John Meynell, had taken possession of his estates in Little Broughton and Dromanby. About eight years subsequently to this event, in consequence of rumours being circulated that John Meynell had been murdered, Roger Meynell, of North Kilvington, cousin of the deceased, filed a bill against Major John Talbot for the recovery of the estates, which Major Talbot had taken possession of. From the pleadings in the cause, it appeared that John Meynell, being a Roman-catholic recusant, conveyed his lands to his two protestant uncles, Roger and John Talbot, in order to avoid their seizure under the penal statutes then in severe force on account of the infamous plot of the perjured Oates, but with the implied understanding that his two uncles should only hold them in trust for him. Nevertheless, upon the demise of John Meynell, Major John Talbot claimed and took possession of the estates, for the recovery of which the action was brought by

Thomas Meynell purchased, in 1612, the manor of Sowerby for £650. He d. 13 July, 1653, leaving no further issue by his second wife, Mary Gale. He was s. by his elder son, the heir at law, Roger Meynell, in whose favour Sir John Trevor pronounced his decree. From the interrogatories administered to the witnesses, it appears, that when suspicions of the murder arose, Cuthbert Bowman, the servant of the deceased John Meynell, being apprehended and examined before the magistrates at Ripon, confessed the foul deed, and also declared at whose suggestions he had committed it. When he was, however, arraigned before the judges at York, he refused to plead to the indictment, and standing mute, suffered the punishment of the "Peine forte et dure," and actually died under the horrible infliction of pain. The interrogatories tend to fix the guilt of instigation upon the uncle, Major John Talbot.

Mr. Molony, who s. his father 12 Oct. 1823, is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Clare, and served the office of sheriff in 1828.

Lineage.

The Milesian family of Molony is one of great antiquity in the sister island. O'Halloran (Hist. of Ireland, vol. iii. p. 408) says, "From Cormac Cas (who was of the line of Heber, eldest son of Milesius) are descended, first, O'Brien, chief of Thomond; Macmahon, Lord of Corca-Bhaisgin; Macnamara, marshal of Thomond; Mac Clancy, hereditary chief justice; Mac Bruodin, hereditary historian; O'Hickery and Nolan, the hereditary medical tribe; Mac Curtins, hereditary bards, &c. Besides these hereditary officers, the following noble families are derived from this great source: O'Dea, O'Hehir, O'Quin, M'Ennery, O'Grady, O'Mollowney, and others," and in his "List of ancient Irish territories, and by what Milesian families possessed before and after the invasion of Henry II." Ceil-tanan* (otherwise Kiltanon) is mentioned among the rest as the estate of O'Molony.

The Molonys were formerly princes of Clare, where they possessed a large tract of country called the O'Molony's Lands, as may be seen from some of the old maps of that country.

In Catholic times, three members of the family attained the mitre, as appears from the epitaph on the tomb of John O'Molony, Bishop of Limerick in 1687, who, after the siege of that city, followed King James II. to Paris, where he assisted in the foundation of a university for the education of Irish priests, in the chapel belonging to which he was buried in 1702. The bishop's nephew,

This eminent lawyer was formerly sheriff of Fifeshire, and afterwards successively Solicitor-General of Scotland, and one of the judges of the Supreme Courts in that country. He is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Fifeshire.

Lineage.

From Sir Robert Sibbald's History of Fife and Kinross, a book of unquestionable authority, we learn that "Pitmilly is the house of a very ancient family of the name of Monypenny, and now the seat of David Monypenny, Esq." This family produced some very eminent statesmen in Scotland, and from a branch settled in France, several sprang, who became equally distinguished in that country. The most celebrated was the Sieur de Concressault, who was often employed in important negotiations, and at different times visited Scotland as ambassador in the reigns of JAMES III. and JAMES IV. The Lord Monypenny, whom we find in the parliament rolls in King JAMES the Third's reign, also sprang from a branch of this family. In 1211, Thomas, Prior of St. Andrew's, gave "Ricardo Monipinii, terram de Putmullin (Pitmilly) quam Malisius tenuit." John de Monypenny, of Pitmilly, swore fealty to King EDWARD I., 1296, and another, or the same John de Monypenny, was one of the ambassadors from the Pope and French King, to solicit EDWARD III. on behalf of the Scots, and obtained a safe conduct to pass into Scotland, 22 Jan. 1335-6.

The late representative of this ancient family,

ALEXANDER MONYPENNY, Esq. of Pitmilly, lieut.-col. of the 56th regt., son of David Monypenny, of Pitmilly, by his wife, a dau. of Marjoribanks of Marjoribanks, m. Miss Chamberlain, sister of the late Mr. Justice Chamberlain, of the Court of King's Bench in Ireland, and had issue,

MORAY OF ABERCAIRNY.

MORAY-STIRLING, WILLIAM, Esq. of Abercairny, co. Perth, and Ardoch, major in the army, m. the Hon. Fanny Douglas, dau. of Archibald, Lord Douglas, by the Lady Frances Scott, grand-aunt of Walter, Duke of Buccleuch. Major Moray-Stirling has served for a long period in the army, was ten years in India, and was present at Waterloo, where he was severely wounded. He s. his mother in Ardoch, and became the representative and possessor of the estates of the ancient house of Abercairny on the death of his brother in Dec. 1840.

Lineage.

The great house of MORAY, or MURRAY, whose acknowledged chieftainship is now vested in ABERCAIRNY, derives from

FRESKINE, a Fleming, who settled in Scotland during the reign of DAVID I., and acquired from that monarch the lands of Strathbrock, in the co. Linlithgow. Freskine was s. in 1158, by his only son,

WILLIAM DE MORAVIA, who left two sons. The elder,

WILLIAM DE MORAVIA, s. his father in 1200. He seems to have m. the dau. and heiress of David de Olifard, justiciary of Loudoun, in the reign of ALEXANDER II., to have acquired by her the lands of BOTHWELL, and to have had a son and heir,*

WALTER DE MORAVIA, who s. his father in 1226, and was the first of this family designed by the title of "Bothwell." Walter de Moravia m. a dau. of Duncan, Earl of Fife, and had two sons, WILLIAM and ANDREW, by the elder of whom,

SIR WILLIAM DE MORAVIA, Dominus de Bothwell, he was s. in 1284. He d., however, without issue, in 1293, and was s. by his brother,

SIR ANDREW MORAY, of Bothwell, who was joint governor of the kingdom, distinguished himself as the associate of WALLACE, when that illustrious patriot reared the standard of national independence. He m. a dau. of Sir John Cumin, Lord of Badenach, and falling at the battle of Stirling, left issue,

I. ANDREW, (Sir,) who s. at Bothwell. He m. the Lady Christian Bruce, sister of King ROBERT I., of Scotland, and had two sons,
JOHN and THOMAS, successively Lords of Bothwell. The elder d. without issue, and the younger, Thomas, left an only dau. and heiress, JEAN, m. to Archibald, Lord of Galloway, afterwards Earl of Douglas.
II. WILLIAM, of Drumsargard.

The second son,

SIR WILLIAM MORAY, of Drumsargard, who d. about the year 1300, and was s. by his son,

SIR JOHN MORAY, de Drumsargard, a personage of great influence at the period in which he lived. He m. in 1299, the Lady Mary, only dau. of Malise, 6th Earl of Strathern, by whom he acquired the lands of Abercairny, Ogilvie, &c., and had issue, MAURICE (Sir); ALEXANDER (Sir); and Walter, ancestor of the Morays, of Ogilface, a family now extinct. Sir John Moray, dying in the early part of the fourteenth century, was s. by his eldest son,

SIR MAURICE MORAY, of Drumsargard, a steady adherent of DAVID BRUCE, who obtained, in 1343, from that monarch, a charter of the Earldom of STRATHERN, to himself and the heirs male of his body. His lordship m. a dau. of Thomas Randolph, Earl of Moray, but had no issue. Accompanying King DAVID on his unfortunate expedition into England, the earl was slain at the battle of Durham, in 1346, when the title of Strathern reverted to the crown, while the estates and representation of the family devolved on his brother,

SIR ALEXANDER MORAY, who was returned heir to his paternal inheritance in 1349. In 1366, at the decease of Thomas, last Lord of Bothwell, without male issue, Sir Alexander claimed, as next heir male, the succession to his estates; but the Lord of Galloway, having m. as before stated, the dau. and heiress of the deceased Lord of Bothwell, had obtained full possession. "The power of the Douglasses," says the Baronage, "being then very great, Sir Alexander found it impossible for him to get justice in the ordinary courts of judicature; yea, their influence was then so universal, that he could get not lawyers to plead his cause." Sir Alexander Moray was s. at his decease by his son,

SIR ANDREW MORAY, of Ogilvy and Abercairny, on whom King JAMES II. of Scotland, conferred the honour of knighthood. He m. a dau. of Sir Humphrey Cunningham, of Glengarnock, an ancient Ayrshire family, by whom he left at his demise, temp. JAMES III., (with three daus., the elder m. to Sir Maurice Drummond, of Con-

MORE OF LINLEY.

More, Robert-Bridgeman, Esq. of Linley, in Salop, b. 29 April, 1788, s. his father 12 Jan. 1818. Mr. More was sheriff of Shropshire in 1822.

Lineage.

This is a family of great antiquity, deriving its name from the parish of More, near Bishop's Castle.

Richard de More, of More, in the parish of More, and co. of Salop, living in the beginning of the thirteenth century, was father of Richard de More, of More, who m. and had three sons. The second,

William de More, left two sons, Sir Roger de la More, living in 1379, who s. his uncle Roger in the More estate, but d. issueless, and

William de More, father of

William de More, of More, in Salop, and of More House, in Corvedale, which he inherited from his uncle, Sir Roger. He was living 21 Richard II., and left a son,

Richard More, of More and Larden, living 11 Henry VI., who m. Agnes Hill, and their son,

John More, of Larden, who flourished in the reign of Henry VII., m. Joyce Aston, and had two sons, William, his heir, and Richard, ancestor of the Mores, formerly of Millichope, in Salop. The elder,

William More, Esq. of Larden, in 1491, m. Elizabeth, dau. of John Berkeley, and had two sons, viz., Edward, his heir, and Thomas, of Nedham, in Suffolk, whose son, Robert, returned into Shropshire and was of Linley; he was buried at the More, 20 March, 1603-4, leaving a son, RICHARD, of whom presently. The elder son,

EDWARD MORE, Esq. of Larden, 8 HENRY VIII., m. Elizabeth, dau. of Edward Cludde, Esq. of Orleton, and had three sons, viz., I. THOMAS, his heir, II. John, clerk of the Exchequer, father of Sir Edward More, Knt. of Odiham, in Hampshire, and Eustace. The eldest son,

THOMAS MORE, Esq., who s. his father at Larden, m. and left at his decease, a son and successor,

JASPER MORE, Esq. of Larden, who d. in 1613, leaving three daus. only, (one of whom m. Samuel More, the parliamentarian.) The More and Larden estates passed to his cousin,

RICHARD MORE, Esq. of Linley, who thus reunited the ancient estates of the family, being styled of More, Linley, and Larden; he m. a sister of Sir Thomas Harris, of Boreatton, Bart.; was sheriff in 1619, and represented the town of Bishop's Castle in the Long or Fatal Parliament of CHARLES I. The part he took was decidedly anti-monarchical, and he appears early among the most active partizans of the Parliament within the county: but he d. 6 Dec. 1643, before the triumph of his party, and was s. by his eldest son,

SAMUEL MORE, Esq. of More, Linley, and Larden, then forty-nine years of age, who inherited his father's principles, or perhaps influenced them, and took a leading part in the civil commotions of Shropshire. He had scarcely paid the last rites to his father, when he was called upon to take the command of Hopton Castle, one of the few fortresses in Shropshire which were at that time in the interest of the Parliament; and he gallantly sustained a month's siege, with but thirty-one men against five-hundred horse and foot. Subsequent events crowned with success the party espoused by Colonel More, as he is generally called; and he took a leading part throughout the Interregnum, in the internal regulations of Shropshire, of which he was returned to be one of the four representatives to the Parliament summoned by Cromwell, for September, 1656. His first wife, a dau. of his kinsman, Jasper More, brought him three children. By a second marriage he had three sons and four daus., one of whom, Anne, m. Sir John Turton, a puisne judge of the King's Bench. The sons were, I. RICHARD, his heir, II. Thomas, M.D., d. unm. in 1697, aged 69, and III. Robert, of Linley, who m. Sarah, dau. of John Walcot, of Walcot, in Salop, and had an only son, ROBERT, successor to his cousin, Thomas More, of More and Larden. The eldest son,

Captain Morris entered the navy at the early age of twelve, and served as midshipman, throughout the French and American wars, in the Maidstone, Centurion, (Lord Anson's ship, which sailed round the world,) Princess Royal, Camilla, Drake, Courageux, Lizard, Niger, Marten, and Queen; and, when promoted to the rank of lieutenant, (2 April, 1793,) in the Duke, Glory, Proserpine, Royal Sovereign, Engageante, Dryad, and Trent. On the 8th May, 1804, he was made commander, and had under his orders the Espiegle and Jalouse. He was engaged at the capture of the French frigate Sybille, in 1783, when midshipman of the Centurion, and at the attack on Martinique, in 1793, when lieutenant of the Duke. He was promoted to the rank of post-captain, 12 Aug. 1812.

Lineage.

The name of Morris is of great antiquity, and is known under various orthographies; among others occur Morys, Moris, Morris, Morriss, Morres, Morice, Morrice, Maurice, &c., and several others compounded with Fitz, Clan, Mount, De, and various other initial expressions. It is composed of the Welsh words, "Mawr-rwyce; Anglice, "Warlike—powerful in war." To this, one of the mottoes borne by the family of Morris seems to have reference, "Marte et Mari faventibus."

The family of which we are about to treat claims descent (in common with others of the same name, of ancient British origin) from ELYSTAN GLODRYDD, a powerful British chieftain, Founder of the IV. Royal Tribe of Wales, b. in 933, who derived his name ELYSTAN (or Athelstane) from the Saxon king ATHELSTAN, who was his godfather, The appellation of Glodrydd, or the Illustrious, was bestowed upon him, indicative of his personal deeds, as well as of his rank and extensive possessions, which comprised nearly all the lands between the Severn and the Wye. (See those names.)

Roger Morris d. 13 Jan. 1748, and was buried at St. George's, Hanover-square, 4 Feb. His third son,

ROGER MORRIS, (The Hon.) a member of the governor's council at New York, and lieut.-col. in the army, b. 28 Jan. 1727, who had received his company, in the 17th regiment, then stationed at Westminster, at the early age of seventeen, served with distinction in the first American war, and was wounded in the celebrated battle of the Monongahela river, in which General Braddock was killed, with most of his officers. In that engagement George Washington, Robert Orme, and Roger Morris, Esqrs., were aides-de-camp to General Braddock, and of the conflict an original manuscript account, a very curious document, written by one of the surviving officers, is in the possession of the present Captain Henry-Gage Morris, R.N. He was also present at the taking of Quebec, and was aide-de-camp at other periods to General Gage and Lord Amherst. On the breaking out of the second American war, Col. Morris, as holding the king's commission, was bound by his duty to adhere to the side of the English government, and in consequence, the estates which he held in right of his wife, Mary Philipse, were confiscated by the Americans, and she herself attainted and rendered incapable of inheriting. Her brother, Frederick, and her surviving sister, also adhered to the mother country; but the children of Philip Philipse (who d. before the war broke out) being too young to take any part in it, their property was preserved to them and their descendants, and they still reside at Philipsburgh, in America, their old family seat. Frederick Philipse, as head of the family, received "compensation money" from the English government, (curtailed by Mr. Pitt,) 62,075*l.* as his share. Colonel Beverley Robinson received, in right of his wife, (who was the other surviving sister besides Mrs. Morris,) 17,000*l.* for his life interest in the same, from the British treasury; and Colonel Morris, in right of his wife, 17,000*l.* for his life interest. Excuse was made for the smallness of the sum, on the score that the property was secured by the treaty of peace. In America it was not then the custom to have marriage settlements; but Col. Morris, previously to his alliance, had settled his property on his children, which the American government were not aware of; and in consequence of a clause in the treaty of peace, that settlements should hold good, it was said that the rights of the children would be secured to them. But the family could not then afford to go to law for them, after all their losses, and moreover, to pay for all the improvements made on the estates, during their expulsion, by the American farmers of them, one hundred and fifty in number; and accordingly, in the year 1809, Capt. Henry-Gage Morris, on behalf of himself and his two sisters, sold the reversionary right to Mr. John Jacob Astor, a German speculator and capitalist, (the American Rothschild, see Washington Irving's "Astoria,") for 20,000*l.* (less than one-third of the portion of each of the three younger children, (Frederick Philipse and his sisters were left equal shares by their father,) viz., Col. Morris, in right of his wife, Col. Beverley Robinson, in right of his wife, and Frederick Philipse. Thus the whole property, even at that time, was worth 600,000*l.* or 700,000*l.*, and in the present times, its value would be incalculable, nearly the whole of New York being built

Lieut. Morris was the first officer to board the enemy's ship, and to him the French captain surrendered his sword, which is still preserved among other family relics. Family of Philipse.

The ancient Dutch family of PHILIPSE is presumed to have been originally of Bohemian extraction, and to have fled thence, on the persecutions that arose in the times of John Huss and Jerome of Prague. Cooper, the American novelist, in his preface to the original edition of "The Water Witch," speaks of them as the "Bohemian Felipses," and in the Standard Novel Edition, as having obtained a re-grant of their original manor of Philipsbourg, from which they derived the title of "patroon," or "Philipse of that ilk," as it would be said in Scotland. The name had originally, it is probable, some meaning.

FREDERICK PHILIPSE, of Philipsbourg, the founder of the present family, unquestionably one of the principal founders of New York, emigrated from Holland to America with Gen. Stuveysant, and arrived at New York in 1658, at that time in the possession of the Dutch, and called New Netherlands. He brought with him money, plate, and jewels, having left East Friesland, with the consent of the stadtholder and the states-general, to take possession of a large purchase of land he had made in the province of New York, Fredericksbourg, called the upper, and Philipsbourg, called the lower, patent, with many houses he had purchased in the city of New York, and land, which he laid out in streets, and afterwards built upon. He settled in the town, and also erected the house at Philipsbourg. He m. Margaret Dacres, and had a son and a dau.,

Ann. Jane-Laura. Adeline-Frances.
Matilda. Emily. Ellen. Clara.

This gentleman, a colonel in the army, and Knight of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic order, received the honour of Knighthood at Carlton Palace, 20 April, 1825, in consideration of his ancient and honourable descent. Sir Robert s. his father, in 1794, in the estate of Cockairny, and in part of the Barony of Inverkeithing, originally the property of the potent Earls of Dunbar. This estate was conveyed by Galiena, dau. of Waldeve, 4th Earl of Dunbar, who d. in 1182, to her husband, Philip de Moubray, with whose descendants it has continued to the present period, with the exception of the short interval from 1320 to 1346, when the possession was suspended by forfeiture. Sir Robert Moubray, when a capt. in the 80th regt. of foot, embarked at Ceylon in 1801, under the orders of Colonel Wellesley, (now Duke of Wellington,) to join the standard of Sir Ralph Abercrombie in Egypt. He served ten years in India, and eight in the Mediterranean.

Lineage.

PHILIP DE MOWBRAY, second son of Nigel de Mowbray, and brother of William de Mowbray, ancestor of the Dukes of Norfolk, m. Galiena, dau. of Waldeve, Earl of Dunbar, and with her acquired considerable property, particularly the Baronies of Barbougle, Dalmeny, and Inverkeithing. He was ambassador to England, in 1215 and 1220, to treat of the marriage of King ALEXANDER II. with the Princess Joan. He had two sons, I. ROGER; and II. Nigel.

ROGER DE MOUBRAY, the elder son, in a charter to the church of Soltray, confirmed to the Abbey of Jedburgh the donation of the church which Waldeve, the son of Cospatrick, "my grandfather" (avus meus) made to that abbey.

GALFRID DE MOUBRAY, the next on record, one of the magnates Scotiæ, from 1287 to 1294, m. the second dau. of Red John Cumyn, Justiciary of Scotland, sister of Black John Cumyn, who m. Marjory, sister of JOHN BALIOL, King of Scotland. They had issue five sons. The fourth,

SIR PHILIP DE MOUBRAY, fell with King EDWARD BRUCE at the battle of Dundalk, in 1318. He m. Eve, Lady of Redcastle, in Forfarshire, and had one son, JOHN (Sir), of Redcastle, slain at Annan, in 1332, on the part of Edward Baliol; and a daughter,

PHILIPPA DE MOUBRAY, designed dau. and heiress of Sir Philip de Moubray in a regal charter, 3 Aug. 1364. This lady m. Sir Bartholomew de Loen, a foreign knight, probably of the house of Heynberg, in Guelderland, related to the Dukes of Gueldres, who were connected in marriage with the kings of England and Scotland. Philippa and her husband had Barnbougle, Dalmeny, and Inverkeithing restored to them by royal charter of 28 May, 1346; and they occur frequently in original instruments down to 1375. Their only child,

DAVID, assumed, as a matter of course, the distinguished name of his maternal ancestors, MOUBRAY, his father, being a foreigner, without property and connexion in Scotland. He was contracted in marriage to the Lady Janet Stewart, dau. of Robert, Earl of Fife and Monteith (afterwards Duke of Albany, and Regent of Scotland, son of King ROBERT II.), in 1372, by indenture, under which the estates were provided to the issue of that marriage. In 1401, the lands of Barnbougle, Dalmeny, and Inverkeithing, were the property of

JOHN DE MOUBRAY, indicating that he was son and heir of that marriage. He was subsequently knighted, and a strong proof that he was grandson of the Duke of Albany, Regent of Scotland, occurs in his forcibly dispossessing Margaret, Lady of Cragy, of her lands of Luckald, in the barony of Dalmeny, "wickedly, contrary to God and all justice," as the record bears, and transmitting them to his son, as none but a near connexion of that unprincipled and powerful governor of the kingdom durst have ventured to act with such flagrant injustice. He was dead before 1 Feb. 1426, when

PHILIP DE MOUBRAY, of Barnbougle, is described as son and heir of the deceased Sir John de Moubray, Knt., Lord of Barnbougle, in an instrument of appellation to Pope MARTIN V. of that date.

PHILIP MOWBRAY, his son, had a charter of the barony of Dalmeny, on his father's resignation, 6 Feb. 1450-1, and occurs in an indenture 25 Jan. 1461-2. He m. Isabel Stewart, and had a son,

SIR DAVID MOUBRAY, of Barnbougle, who was served heir of Philip, his father, 9 March, 1466-7, and last occurs in 1494. He was father of two sons,

I John, of Dalmeny, whose grand-daughter and heiress, Barbara Moubray, only child of Sir John Moubray, of Barnbougle, m. Robert Bartoun, son of Sir Robert Bartoun, of Over-Bartoun, high treasurer of Scotland. Robert Bartoun assumed the surname of Moubray. The eldest son of this marriage, John Moubray, of Barnbougle, was father of Robert Moubray, of Barnbougle, whose son and successor, Sir Robert Moubray, of Barnbougle, m. the Lady Anne Erskine, dau. of the first Earl of Kellie, and was obliged, through debts and other misfortunes, to dispose of the baronies of Barnbougle, Dalmeney, and Inverkeithing, to the first Earl of Haddington, in 1615. He d. s. p. in 1675.
II. WILLIAM.

The second son of Sir David,

WILLIAM MOUBRAY, of Cockairny, had a charter of the lands of Cockairny, and part of the barony of Inverkeithing, from his nephew, Sir John Moubray, of Barnbougle, wherein he is designed "Sir John's beloved uncle on the father's side," dated 24 Sept. 1511.

JAMES MOUBRAY, of Cockairny, the next proprietor of that estate on record, m. Isabel Cleghorn, and was s. by his eldest son,

ROBERT MOUBRAY, of Cockairny, who m. by contract, in 1576, Margaret, dau. of John Finlasour, of Kelleith, and was father of

JAMES MOUBRAY, of Cockairny, who m. in 1600, Marie, dau. of David Leslye, of Otterstoun, in Fife, and was s. by his son,

JOHN MOUBRAY, of Cockairny, who m. in 1636, Elizabeth Logan, of the family of Logan of Coustoun, and was s. by his eldest son,

ROBERT MOUBRAY, of Cockairny, b. in 1639, who m. in 1666, Margaret, dau. of George Bruce, of Kinnesswood, a near connexion of the Earls of Elgin, Kincardine, and Aylesbury; and of Christian, Countess of Devonshire. Robert Moubray d. in 1681, leaving, with other issue, two sons, I. JOHN, his successor; and II. ROBERT, father of ROBERT MOUBRAY, of the Bush and Castlelaw, co. Edinburgh, whose eldest dau. and heiress, JEAN MOUBRAY, m. in 1748, Archibald Trotter, Esq., second son of Alexander Trotter, Esq. of Cattlesheil, in Berwickshire. The elder son of Robert Moubray,

JOHN MOUBRAY, Esq. of Cockairny, is mentioned in Nisbet's Heraldry as undoubted heir, in a direct and uninterrupted male line, of William Moubray, of Cockairny, who had the charter of these lands from his nephew, Sir

John Moubray, of Barnbougle, in 1511. He m. Margaret, dau. of the Rev. John Kinnaird, minister of East Calder, and granddau. and heiress of Robert Wallwood, Esq. of Lough and Whitfield, by whom he had, with other issue, a son,

I. ROBERT, his successor.

II. John, who had issue, 1. John, whose only child, Ann-Cockerall Moubray, m. to James Trail Hall, Esq. of Dublin, barrister-at-law, and had issue; 2. William; 3. Margaret, m. to Walter Ross, Esq., and left a son, John Ross, whose only child, Agnes, m. to Charles Macintosh, Esq.; 4. Magdalen; and 5. Jean, m. to James Campbell, Esq.

John Moubray dying in 1732, was s. by his eldest son,

ROBERT MOUBRAY, Esq. of Cockairny, b. 1 Jan. 1700, who m. in 1726, his cousin, Mary, only child of James Dudgeon, Esq. of Inverkeithing, and had issue, John, who d. capt. royal marines; ROBERT, successor to his father; James; George, lieut. O'MULLOY, Standard-Bearer to the King in Ireland.

Mulloy, Coote, Esq. of Hughstown, co. Ros- ommon, chief and representative of the ancient ilesian family of O'Mulloy, "Standard-bearers the Crowne of England in Ireland," m. in 1799, lary, eldest dau. of William Lloyd, Esq. of ockville, in the same county, and has issue, Coote. Robert.

William-James, m. 6 March, 1837, Anne, eldest surviving dau. of the late Hamilton Gorges, Esq. of Kilbrew, and has issue, William-Gorges, b. in Oct. 1839, and Emily Louisa.

Mary. Hessy. Margaret.

Lineage.

The family of O'Mulloy, of acknowledged Milesian de- ent, enjoys the hereditary honour of standard-bearer to e crown of England in Ireland. It derives from Niall, of the nine hostages, Monarch of all Ireland, D., 371, characterized as "one of the most gallant of all e princes of the Milesian race."

Niall, whose designation "of the nine hostages," arose om his having nine captive princes at the same time in s keeping, had, with other issue,

Eogan, or Owen, ancestor of the Great O'Niell, from . whom Tir-Owen, or Tyrone.
Conall Gulbane, progenitor of O'Donnell, chief of Tyr- connel.
Fiachada, from whom derive the O'Mulloys, in whose possession Fercall (now comprehending the baronies of Eglish and Ballyboy, in the King's Co.) remained from the 5th century, until long after the invasion of the English in 1179; in fact, until about the year 1641, the period of the great rebellion.

In the "Desiderata Curiosa Hibernica," (vol. ii. p. 52,) he territory of Fearcall* is stated to have been 49,235 res in extent, and the castles of the O'Mulloys are thus umerated by Slater in his "Itinerary," Geshil, Erry, emanagh, Broghill, Rathlin, and Clonkein. The name Mulloy is derived from the Irish words "Mulluagh ah oah," i. e., "the front of the battle;" and this brave clan, their unwearied opposition to the English in defence their hereditary dominions, while a tenable position mained, abundantly proved that they merited the ap- llation. For a space of 484 years, that is, from 1172 hen the English first got possession of the island) to 57, (the 3rd of Philip and Mary,) they maintained eir independence against the invaders.

In that rare and invaluable MS., entitled, "Annals of the our Masters," which has never been but partially trans- ted into English, and which is deposited in the library of the Royal Irish Academy, a very curious list is to be found of all the chiefs of the great Milesian families who were entitled to attend the parliament of the whole kingdom in the year 1585. This is a remarkable period in Irish history, no other than a Pale Parliament having been previously held in Ireland. In this list Conall O'Mulloy (the then chief of Fercall) is expressly mentioned. Conall subsequently surrendered his lands to Queen Elizabeth, and had a re-grant thereof by patent in 1590. A younger son of this ancient sept,

* "Fearcall, territoire, autrefois dans la Midie, à présent ns le Comté du Roi, qui comprend les deux baronnies de lly-cowen, et de Bally-Boy, patrimoine depuis le cin- ième siècle des O'Mulloys, de le race de Herémon, par Niall, ygiallach, et Fiacha, son fils, subdivise en plusiers autres anches."—Vide "Histoire de L'Irlande, par m. L'Abbé a-Geoghegan, tome premier," Paris edition, 1758.

Capt. Anthony Mulloy (thirty-third in descent from Fiachada, son of Niall of the nine hostages, and tenth from Hugh Mor, or Great O'Mulloy, lord of the territory of Fercall, chief of his name) emigrated to the co. Roscommon in the early part of Elizabeth's reign, and d. 20 July, 1603. Tradition affirms that Capt. Anthony Mulloy was sent into Connaught with powers but little inferior to those of the president of that province, and he is sometimes erroneously mentioned as the president himself. It is likely he was provost-marshal, as he is constantly depicted in the most sanguinary colours. This office was some years after held by Sir Charles Coote, father of the first Earl of Mountrath, and of Richard, Lord Collooney.

Capt. Anthony Mulloy (commonly called Green Mulloy, from the colour of his uniform) procured a large grant of land including the manor of Aughtortira, (now Coote Hall,) Hughstown, (the seat of the present Coote Mulloy, Esq.,) &c. &c. He m. Honora Dowell, (of the family of Dowell, of Mantua House,) and had a son and successor,

William O'Mulloy, who is styled by Lodge, in his Peerage of Ireland, "the great O'Mulloy, of Ughterhera, in the co. Roscommon, knight of the shire, and governor of that county." At a meeting of all the gentlemen of Roscommon, held at Ballintobber, at which Sir Lucas Dillon presided, we find his name enumerated (together with the names of Sir Ulick Bourke, Sir L. Dillon, &c. &c.) amongst those who attended and took an oath "for maintaining the king's prerogative and the Romish religion." He m. Margaret Clifford, and had two sons and three daus., viz.,

I. Edward, who m. Mary dau. of the O'Conor Don, and had a son, Green Mulloy, who m. Elinor, dau. of Sir Maurice Hurley, Knt., and was father of Captain William Mulloy, in the service of James II., who m. Alson, dau. of Sir Oliver Tuite, Bart. of Sonnagh, in Westmeath, and had one son, Theobald Mulloy, captain in the service of the King of Portugal, d. s. p.

He m. twice; by his first wife, a dau. of Sir — King, he had no issue; but by the second, Frances Harlowe, he had two sons, Charles, his heir, and William, who d. at Exeter, a captain in the army. Charles Mulloy, Esq. This gentleman being at Athlone when some of King James's officers were raising recruits, was persuaded to fight for the deposed monarch, and had the singular fate of being taken prisoner by a party of the regiment of horse in which his father was captain, at the battle of the Boyne. He was then but seventeen, and for his father's sake his life was spared. He afterwards served in some of William's wars, and at the siege of Vigo was wounded in the leg. Their bravery is further evidenced by two chiefs of the clan having been killed at Bannockburn, one at Holmedown Hill, and another on Pinkie Field. The great grandfather of the present representative of the Teaninich branch, Laura-Elizabeth. Anne-Clementina.

Emma.

This gentleman, who is a justice of the peace and deputy-lieutenant for the counties of Ayr and Renfrew, s. his father in 1831.

Lineage.

The Mures of Caldwell are immediately descended from Sir Reginald More, or Mure, of Abercorn and Cowdams, who appears to have been chamberlain of Scotland as early as 1329, the first year of the reign of David II. The name occurs, written at various periods, More, Mure, Muir, Moor, &c.; and from the correspondence of the armorial bearings, seems to be the same originally as that of the Moores of Moore Place, in Kent, now represented by the Irish Moores, Marquises of Drogheda. The arms of "Muir of Caldwell," and "Muir of Rouallan," being then the two chief houses of the name in Scotland, are exhibited on page 46 of the Scottish Heraldry, emblazoned by Sir David Lindsay, Lord Lyon about the year 1540. Those of Caldwell present the plain shield of the Mores, "three mullets, on a bend;" while on the shield of Rowallan are quartered the wheat-sheaves of the Comyns.

The most ancient of the name on record are the Mores of Polkelly, near Kilmarnock, in Ayrshire; one of whom, David de More, appears as witness to a charter of Alexander II. The direct male line of Polkelly becoming extinct, the estate passed, by marriage of the heir female, to the Mores of Rowallan, cadets of the family, who had acquired the neighbouring estate of Rowallan from the Comyns, its ancient lords. Crawford, the Scottish genealogist, supposes Sir Reginald, the chamberlain, to have been a brother of Sir Adam More, of Rowallan, whose dau., Elizabeth, was Queen Consort of Robert II., the first of the Stuart kings; but of this there is no evidence, and it appears as likely that he sprang directly from the original stock of Polkelly, and may be the same Reginald, who, together with a Gilchrist More, signs the Ragman Roll in 1296, and whom Nisbet takes to be the old Polkelly Mores, "the root of the Mores, an antienter family than the Rowallans."

The paternal inheritance of Sir Reginald seems to have been Cowdams, in Ayrshire, not far from the original seat of the family. These lands belonged to him previously to 1328, as shewn by an agreement concerning them between him and the monks of Paisley, dated in that year. They have ever since continued in the family, Mr. Mure, of Caldwell, being still their feudal superior. They are next noticed in a charter of the Earl of Strathern, afterwards Robert II., dated 1367, confirming the previous deed of 1328. Johannes Mure, jun. de Cowdams, appears, in 1446, as one of the commissioners for fixing the boundaries of the burgh of Prestwick, and the papers relative thereto, now preserved at Caldwell, extend as far back as 1475.

Sir Reginald acquired his extensive estates of Abercorn &c. in the Lothians and Stirlingshire, by marriage with one of the co-heiresses of Sir John Graham, of Eskdale and Abercorn; another of whom wedded Walter Steward, of Scotland; and a third, Sir William Douglas, "the Knight of Liddesdale." He obtained, also, by grant from the crown, on the forfeiture of Sir Andrew Murray in 1332, the lands of Tillybardine. These were afterwards restored for a pecuniary consideration, by his son, Sir William More, to Sir William Murray, ancestor of the present Duke of Athol, as appears from an indenture dated 1341. Sir Reginald adhered steadily to the patriotic cause during the English wars in David the Second's reign, and was one of the commissioners appointed, in 1340, to treat with the Lords Percy, Moubray, and Nevil, on a truce between the two nations. He d. soon after, leaving two sons and a dau., viz., I. William, who s. to Abercorn, and d. s. p.; II. Gilchrist, who continued the line of the family; and III. Alicia, m. 1st, to Sir William de Herch (or Herries); and 2ndly, to her cousin, Sir John Steward, of Ralston, son of Walter Steward, of Scotland, by Isabel Graham. Sir Reginald's elder son dying without male issue, the younger,

Gilchrist More, became the male representative of the house of Abercorn. To him descended the property of Cowdams. The estates of Caldwell, in the shires of Ayr and Renfrew, he is supposed to have acquired by marriage with the heiress of Caldwell of that ilk, then a family of some note, having given a chancellor to Scotland in 1349. Crawford is of opinion, that at this time the estates of Rowallan and Polkelly also came to the Abercorn line by a second marriage of Gilchrist with the heir-female of Rowallan; these, he adds, were afterwards settled on the younger children, issue of this marriage, whence the subsequent Mures of Rowallan Polkelly, two distinct families. Rowallan passed, about a century ago, by an heir-female, to the Campbells of Loudoun. The male line of Polkelly is also extinct. To Caldwell and Cowdams succeeded

John More, the first who is designated of "Caldwell," living 29 Oct. 1409, who was s. by John More, Lord of Caldwell, who is witness to a charter, dated 19 Jan. 1430. The next possessor of Caldwell was

John More, whose charter under the great seal bears date 1476. By Elizabeth, his wife, he left, at his decease before 1492, a dau., Marjory, m. to John, Lord Ross, of Hawkhead, ancestor of the present Earl of Glasgow, and a son,

Sir Adam More, of Caldwell, knighted by James IV. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Thomas Sempill, of Elieston, and sister to John, 1st Lord Sempill, and had four sons and two daus. Sir Adam d. about 1513, from which date it is presumed that he fell at the battle of Flodden, fought in that year. He was s. by his second, but eldest surviving son,

John Mure, of Caldwell, who, 20 Feb. 1515, at the head of his followers, took, by assault, "the castle and palace" of the Archbishop of Glasgow, situated near the city, battering the walls in breach "with artillery," and arrying off a rich booty. He m. Lady Janet Stewart, au. of Matthew, Earl of Lennox, (and grand-aunt to ord Darnley, husband of MARY Queen of Scots,) and as s. in 1539, by his eldest son,

JOHN MURE, of Caldwell, who m. 1st, the Lady Isabel Montgomerie, dau. of Hugh, first Earl of Eglinton, and ndly, Christian, dau. of Ninian, Lord Ross, of Hawkhead, nd had (with younger children) two sons, I. JOHN (Sir), is heir; and II. William, of Glanderstoun, ancestor of he MURES of Glanderstoun. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of avin Hamilton, of Raploch, and had (with a dau., Janet, vife of John Pollock, of that ilk) a son and heir, WILLIAM IURE, of Glanderstoun, who m. Jean, dau. of the Rev. Hans Hamilton, and sister of James, Earl of Clanbrassil, y whom he left, at his decease in 1640, (with a dau., anet, wife of the Rev. John Carstairs, and mother of William Carstairs, the patriot,) a son, WILLIAM MURE, of Glanderstoun, who m. Euphemia Mure, of Caldwell, and ad a son, WILLIAM, of Glanderstoun and Caldwell. The Laird of Caldwell, together with his kinsmen and de-endants, took part with the Earl of Glencairn at the Field of the Muir of Glasgow"—a bloody action, fought etween the partizans of the Earls of Lennox and Glen-airn, headed by the latter chieftain, against the Earl of Arran, Regent of Scotland, in 1543. John Mure d. about 554, when his eldest son,

SIR JOHN MURE, s. to Caldwell. He received the honour of knighthood from King JAMES V., and marrying Janet Kennedy, of Bargeny, had three sons, ROBERT, William, and James. He was slain on the 10th Sept. 1570, by the Cunninghames of Aikett and Raeburne, of that ilk, the ame who were afterwards principals in the murder of his ousin, Hugh, Earl of Egleton, in 1585. To Sir John s. is son,

SIR ROBERT MURE, of Caldwell. This gentleman was n the confidence of JAMES VI., by whom he was knighted, nd to whom he was related through the Lennoxes. A umber of original letters, addressed to him by that mo-narch, are still preserved at Caldwell, some of them curious, as illustrating the manners of the times. He m. 1st, Eli-zabeth, dau. of Kincaid, of that ilk, by whom he had two sons, John, who d. s. p., and James, who m. Margaret, dau. of Sir William Mure, of Rowallan, and left at his death, v. p., four sons and as many daus.; the eldest son, ROBERT, was successor to his grandfather. Sir Robert m. 2ndly, Barbara, dau. of Sir George Preston, of Valley-field, and relict of Robert, Lord Sempill, by whom he left a dau., m. to Sir William Hamilton, Bart. of Preston. About 1610, the lands of Thornton, near Kilmarnock, long in possession of the family, were alienated to a cadet, founder of the house of Mure of Thornton, the male line of which becoming extinct in 1701, in the person of Sir Archibald Mure, Lord Provost of Edinburgh, the estate passed by his heir female to John Cunninghame, of Caddel, and is now held by Col. Cunninghame, of Thornton, the superiority being still with Caldwell. Sir Robert was s. at his decease by his grandson,

ROBERT MURE, of Caldwell, who m. Jean, dau. of Uch-tred KNOX, of Ramphorlie, and had three sons, succes-sively "of Caldwell," and one dau., Euphemia, m. to William Mure, of Glanderstoun. Robert Mure, it seems, fell in battle about 1640, and was s. by his eldest son,

ROBERT MURE, of Caldwell, who d. in 1644, and was s. by his younger brother,

JAMES MURE, of Caldwell, at whose decease, without issue, in 1654, the estates devolved upon his brother,

WILLIAM MURE, of Caldwell, who m. in 1655, Barbara, dau. of Sir William Cunninghame, of Cunninghamehead. This laird, and a few other west country gentlemen, fa-vourable to the cause of civil and religious liberty, met in arms at Chitterfleet, near Caldwell, 28 Nov. 1666; whence a troop of horse, consisting chiefly of the tenantry of that and the neighbouring properties, set out, under his com-mand, to join the covenanters, who had recently risen in Dumfriesshire, and marched upon Edinburgh; but finding themselves intercepted by the king's troops, and hearing, by the way, of the defeat of the whig army at Pentland, they dispersed. Caldwell was attainted, fled to Holland, and d. in exile. His estates, on forfeiture, were granted to the celebrated General Dalzell. His lady was impri-soned, with two of her daughters, in Blackness Castle, and underwent much cruel persecution, described by Wodrow, the historian of the period. Of Caldwell's three daus., Jane, the eldest, m. to Col. John Erskine, of Carnock, but

MURRAY OF TOUCHADAM AND POLMAISE.

MURRAY, WILLIAM, Esq. of Touchadam and Polmaise, co. Stirling, b. 6 July, 1773; m. 11 June, 1799, Anne, dau. of Sir William Max-well, Bart. of Monreith. This gentleman, who is vice-lieutenant of the co. Stirling, and lieut.-col. of the yeomanry of that shire, s. his father in 1814.

Lineage.

This family has been seated for centuries in the county of Stirling, and is supposed to derive from the noble house of Bothwel. Its patriarch,

* Of the remaining children of James Mure, of Rhoddens, two, Colonel George and Captain Alexander, were wounded at the battle of Fontenoy. A third was Hutchinson Mure, Esq. of Saxham Hall, near Bury St. Edmunds, a merchant in London. The descendants of both George and Hutchinson are now settled in the county of Suffolk. The former, LIEUT.-COL. GEORGE MURE, of the Scots Greys, was grandfather of the present GEORGE MURE, Esq. of Herringswell House, near Mildenhall.

Sir William de Moravia, designed of Sanford, joined Robert Bruce in defence of the liberties of his country, but being taken prisoner by the English, was sent to London, in 1306, and remained in captivity there until exchanged after the battle of Bannockburn. Sir William's son and successor,

Sir Andrew de Moravia, obtained from King David Bruce two charters: the first, granting the lands of Kepmad, dated in 1365; and the second, bestowing Tulchadam, Tulchmallar, &c., in 1369. Sir William d. temp. Robert II., and was s. by his son,

William de Moravia, of Touchadam, living in 1392, in which year he had a charter from King Robert III. He m. Christian Cunninghame, and was father of Alexander de Moravia, of Touchadam, who, in 1455, upon the resignation of his father, got a charter from James II. of the lands of Weigateschaw, co. Lanark, and Touchadam, Newark, &c., in the shire of Stirling, all erected into a barony. He m. — Sutherland, and had a son and successor,

William Murray, of Touchadam, constable of the castle of Stirling in the reign of James III. He m. a lady, named Christian, and had four sons, I. David, his heir; II. John, father of John, of Gawamore, successor to his uncle; III. Herbert; and IV. Patrick. The eldest son,

David Murray, of Touchadam, having no issue, made a resignation of his whole estate to his nephew,

John Murray, of Gawamore, captain of the King's guards and Lord Provost of Edinburgh, who, upon the demise of his uncle, about the year 1474, became "of Touchadam," and got a confirmation thereof under the great seal. This John Murray was a firm and devoted adherent of King James III. After the battle of Stirling, he was deprived of a considerable portion of his estate, and a great number of the old family writs were embezzled and lost. He espoused a dau. of Seaton, of Winton, and had a son and heir,

William Murray, of Touchadam, living in 1507, who m. Agnes, dau. of John Cockburn, of Ormiston, and was s. at his decease, in 1514, by his son,

John Murray, of Touchadam, who had a charter under the great seal, dated 9 June, 1541, of the lands of Sandieholmes, in Lanarkshire. He m. the Lady Janet Erskine, dau. of Robert, fourth Earl of Marr, and had two sons, William and James, by the elder of whom,

Sir John Murray, of Touchadam and Polmais, who got a charter, dated 26 Dec. 1602. Sir John m. Jean, dau. of John Cockburn, of Ormiston, and was s. by his son,

Sir William Murray, of Touchadam and Polmais, who obtained from Charles I. a charter of the lands of Cowie in 1636. During the conflicts which harassed the reign of that ill-fated prince, Sir William strained every nerve in defence of the royal cause, and, in consequence, suffered severely from the enactments of the adverse party. He was in the engagement of the Duke of Hamilton, and, in 1654, was emerced by Cromwell in the sum of fifteen hundred pounds. He d. shortly after, and left, by Elizabeth, his wife, dau. of Sir Alexander Gibson, of Durie, a son and successor,

Lineage.

The first of this family on record,

Archibald de Moravia, mentioned in the chartulary of Newbottle, in 1280, was descended (the author of the critical remarks upon Ragman's Roll presumes) from the Morays, Lords of Bothwel, who, by marriage of a dau. of Sir David Olifard, got considerable possessions in the co. of Selkirk. In 1296, he subscribed the oath of fealty to Edward I., and d. in the reign of Robert Bruce, leaving a son and successor,

Roger de Moravia, who obtained, in 1321, from James, Lord Douglas, superior of his lands, a charter "terrarum de Fala," which estate, subsequently designated Falahill, continued for many years to be the chief title of the family. Roger d. at an advanced age, in 1380, and was s. by his son, Alexander de Moravia, mentioned in a charter under the great seal, from Robert II., before the year 1380. He was father of

Patrick Murray, of Falahill, living in 1413, who d. temp. James II., and was s. by his son,

John Murray, of Falahill, who, upon the resignation of Thomas-Hop Pringle, got a charter from King James III., Johanni de Moravia de Falahill, of part of the lands of Philiphaugh, dated 20 July, 1461. His son,

Patrick Murray, of Falahill, acquiring from Robert Watson several acres of land about Philiphaugh, had a charter from the said Robert, dated 20 Feb. 1477. He subsequently obtained charters of lands in 1480 and 1492. He m. and had one son and a dau., viz., John, his heir, and Margaret, who m. to James, Earl of Buchan. Patrick Murray d. at the close of the 15th century, and was s. by his son,

JOHN MURRAY, of Falahill.

This chieftain, the celebrated "Outlaw Murray," who, with five hundred of his men, bid defiance to the King of Scotland, JAMES IV., is immortalized by the beautiful ballad, preserved in the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, and for ages a popular song in Selkirkshire. "The tradition of Ettrick Forest," says Sir Walter Scott, "bears, that the Outlaw was a man of prodigious strength, possessing a batton or club, with which he laid lee (i.e. waste) the country for many miles round; and that he was at length slain by Buccleuch, or some of his clan, at a little mount, covered with fir trees, adjoining to Newark Castle, and said to have been a part of the garden; a varying tradition bears the place of his death to have been near to the house of the Duke of Buccleuch's gamekeeper, beneath the castle, and that the fatal arrow was shot by Scott, of Haining, from the ruins of a cottage on the opposite side of the Yarrow. There was extant, within these twenty years, some verses of a song on his death. The feud between the outlaw and the Scotts may serve to explain the asperity with which the chieftain of that clan is handled in the ballad."

The song relates the departure of JAMES IV., with "full five thousand men," to suppress the insurrection of the Outlaw; and, subsequently, the humiliating necessity to which the King of Scotland was reduced to compromise with his rebellious subject, by granting to him the heritable sheriffship of the shire of Selkirk.*

Murray m. Lady Margaret Hepburn, dau. of Patrick, first Earl of Bothwell, and had, with three daus., two sons, viz., I. JAMES, his heir; and II. William, ancestor of the Murrays of Romanno and Stanhope. (See BURKE'S Peerage and Baronetage.) "The Outlaw" d. in the early part of JAMES V.'s reign, and was s. by his elder son,

He subsequently, in 1540, had the customs of the burgh of Selkirk and the heritable sheriffship of that county, which had been granted by King JAMES IV. to his grandfather, confirmed and ratified to himself and his heirs. Patrick Murray m. a dau. of John, Lord Fleming, and d. in the reign of Queen MARY, leaving a dau., m. to Somerville, of Cambusnethan, and a son, his successor,

* This gentleman had a grant for life from the crown, 12th Sept., 1626, (1 Charles I.,) of the office and offices of master and worker of monies to be coined in the Tower of London; and, on 8 Nov. following, an indenture was made between the king and Sir Robert, for coining the monies of silver and gold, according to his letters patent. To this office was annexed a salary of four thousand pounds per annum. After the king's murder, the parliament having ordered a new coin to be stamped, Sir Robert Harley refused to coin with any other stamp than that of the king; whereupon the parliament ordered a trial of the pixe to be made at Sir Robert's expense, and removed him from his place. While he had enjoyed it, to the great improvement of our coin, he introduced the famous artist, Thomas Symonds, to be engraver of the dies for the mint.

Camden, in his "Britannia," in the account of Herefordshire, observes: "Erdisley, where the famous and ancient family of BASKERVILLE have long inhabited, which bred in old time so many noble knights; they deduce their original from a niece of Gunora, that most celebrated Norman lady, who long ago flourished in this county and its neighbour, Shropshire; and held the hamlet of Lanton in capite, as of the honour of Montgomery, by the service of giving the king one barbed arrow as often as he came into those parts to hunt in Cornedon Chase."

MYTTON OF HALSTON.

MYTTON, JOHN-FOX, Esq. of Halston, co. Salop, b. 20 Nov. 1823, s. his father, 29 March, 1834.

Lineage.

This family, of importance for several centuries in the co. Salop, is presumed to have taken its surname from the village of MITTON, in the parish of Fitz, about four miles from the town of Shrewsbury. The name occurs in old records, spelt differently, Mitton, Motton, Mutton, and Mytton, and in those we trace its influence to the beginning of the fourteenth century. In the Tallage Roll, of Shrewsbury, anno 1313, WILLIAM DE MUTTON is one of the persons of property who is rated for his goods. In 1360, THOMAS DE MUTTON was Bailiff of Shrewsbury, and in 1373, REGINALD DE MUTTON, the immediate ancestor of the family before us, filled the same municipal office, and at the close of that year was chosen to represent the borough in parliament.

The first person named in the pedigree is

SIR EVERARD DE MUTTON, Knt., whose son,

ALDRED DE MUTTON, was father of SIR HUGH DE MUTTON, Knt., who is stated to have been slain in battle, in the time of the Empress MAUD. Sixth in descent from Sir Hugh's son, ROGER, was HAWEYN DE MUTTON, father of REGINALD DE MUTTON, M.P. for Shrewsbury, in 1373, who m. 1st, the dau. and heir of Sir Hamo Vaughan, Lord of the manor of West Tilbury, Essex, and had by her two sons, THOMAS and John. He m. 2ndly, Eleanor, sister of Thomas le Skinner, of Shrewsbury, and by her was father of SIR RICHARD MITTON, who m. Margaret, dau. and co-heir of Sir Adam Peshall, Knt. of Weston-under-Lizard, and was ancestor of the MYTTONS of Weston. Reginald's eldest son,

THOMAS MITTON, Esq., m. Agnes, dau. and heir of William Burley, Esq. of Malehurst, co. Salop, by Isabel, his wife, dau. and heir of William de Tour, of Shrewsbury, by Jane, his wife, dau. and heir of John Pride, Esq. of the same place, and had an only son,

THOMAS MITTON, Esq., M.P. for Shrewsbury, in 1742, who m. Eleanor, youngest dau. and co-heir of Sir John de Burgh, Knt., Lord of Mawddwy, by Joan, his wife, dau. and co-heir of Sir William Clopton, Knt. of Clopton, and granddau. of Sir Hugh de Burgh, Knt., by Elizabeth, his wife, sister and heir of Foulk, Lord of Mawddwy in Meriouneth, a scion of the Royal Line of Powys. (See HUGHES OF GWERCLAS.) This Thomas was Sheriff of Shropshire, and arrested in his official capacity, near Shrewsbury, Henry de Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, then charged with being a rebel and traitor to the king. By his first wife, Eleanor Burgh, this shrewd burgess had, with three daus., an only son, WILLIAM, his heir. He m. 2ndly, Anne, dau. of the Lord Strange, of Knockin, and relict of Jeffrey Kyffin, Esq., by whom he had two other sons, Sir Adam Mytton, Knt., and Alan Mytton, and two daus. Dying in 1504, he was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM MITTON, Esq., three times Bailiff of Shrewsbury, and M.P. in 1491. Mr. Mitton m. Cicely, dau. of Sir Henry Delves, Knt., by whom he had one son and two daus. Dying in 1512, he was s. by his son,

He m. Anne, dau. of Sir Edward Greville, Knt. of Milcote, co. Warwick, by whom he had, with four daus., as many sons. Mr. Mytton's second wife was a dau. of Jenkin Pigott, Esq. of Rhuddlan, in North Wales, and by her he had a son,

JENKIN, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Thomas Pool, and had a son,

Richard Mytton, alias Mutton, of Rhuddlan, father, by Elin, his wife, dau. of John Conway, Esq., of Peter Mutton, who m. 1st, a lady, named Magdalen, and 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of Sir William Griffith, of Penrhyn. By the former he had a son and successor,

By his third wife, Eleanor, the wealthy heiress of George Harborne, Esq., recorder of Shrewsbury, (she had previously been m. to Richard Beeston, Esq.,) he had,

Richard Mytton d. in 1591, and was s. by his great-grandson,

RICHARD MYTTON, Esq. of Halston, who m. Margaret, dau. of Thomas Owen, Esq. of Condover, one of the judges of the Common Pleas, and had a son and dau., THOMAS, his heir, b. in 1608, and Sarah, m. to Sir Edward Acton, Bart. of Aldenham. Mr. Mytton, who was sheriff of Shropshire, in 1610, was s. at his decease, by his only son,

THOMAS MYTTON, Esq. of Halston, one of the few Shropshire gentlemen who joined the parliamentary standard against King CHARLES, displaying in the cause which he had espoused the most undaunted bearing, tempered with the greatest humanity. As early as Aug. 1643, he held the rank of colonel, and seized the town of Wem, the first place in Salop which the parliamentarians possessed. In the following June he wrested Oswestry from the royalists, and in the beginning of 1645, he made himself master of Shrewsbury. The next year he writes to the parliament, under date of June 15, 1646, that he was devoted to reducing to obedience "the rocky and mountainous country of Caernarvonshire." In the April of that year, he took Ruthin, in the co. Denbigh, and Conway, and was subsequently promoted to the rank of major-general. In the line of politics which he adopted, General Mytton was probably influenced by his connexion with Sir Thomas Myddelton, of Chirk Castle; they married two sisters, and the two brothers-in-law went exactly the same length in opposition to the king, and no further. Their hostility was levelled against prerogative — so despotically strained in the early part of CHARLES'S reign—but they never contemplated the total prostration of the monarchy, or sought the destruction (personally) of the monarch. General Mytton m. in 1629, Margaret, dau. of Sir Robert Napier, of Luton, co. Bedford, and had a son, RICHARD, his heir. He was sheriff of Shropshire, in 1645, and chosen knight of the shire for the same county, in 1654. He d. in London, was buried in St. Chad's Church, Shrewsbury, (the place of sepulture of his ancestors,) on the 29th Nov. 1656, and was s. by his son,

* The family of Whitcombe is of ancient standing in the co. of Worcester and Salop, and represents the Norman family of Mavesyn, of Berwick Maveysyn. The name is derived from Wydicombe, in the parish of Chewton Mendip, co. Somerset, whence came Thomas Wydecombe, who, marrying Judith, dau. and heir of Adam Mavesyn, of Berwick Mavesyn, co. Salop, settled in that shire, temp. Henry IV. Through his grandmother, Elizabeth Whitcombe, Mr. Niblett is representative likewise of the old family of Morton, of whom was Cardinal John Morton, Archbishop of Canterbury, temp. Henry VII.

Lineage.

The origin of the ancient family of Nicholl, written at various periods Nycol, Nicol, Nicoll, Nicolls, Nicholls, and Nicholl, has been by antiquaries variously and largely treated upon. It is stated, that in the time of Edward the Confessor, one Nicholas de Albini, alias Nigell, or Nicholl, came over from Normandy, and was the common ancestor of the Nicholl family. In the county of Chester, Robert Fitz Nigell, or Nicholl, flourished soon after the Conquest, and in the same shire we find William, Baron of Malpas, who lived in the reigns of Stephen and Henry II., bore for his arms "three pheons or darts' heads," as appears on his seal to the grant of the eighth part of Duckenton to his youngest son, Richard, his second son, Robert, having married Mabel, dau. of Robert Fitz-Nigell.

John Fitz-Nicholas held courts in 1307, for the Manor of Nichole, in the hundred of Hinckford, Essex, called in the rolls the Manor of Nicolls, or Fitz-Nicolls. John Fitz-Nicholl held the same manor from 1327 to 1377. The Nicholls of Essex bore for their arms "sa., a pheon, arg." In the county of Northampton, William Nicolls, Esq. of Hardwick, who was b. in 1479, carried "sa., three pheons, arg.," and was ancestor of the Nicolls, afterwards baronets, who had the same arms confirmed and ratified in 1588, with the addition of a canton, arg. Camden assigned similar arms to the Nicholls of Trewane, in Cornwall, with a crescent for difference; and the seal of John Nicholl, Esq. of Llantwitt Major, Glamorganshire, whose will was proved in 1599, was "sa., three pheons, arg.," thus fully proving that the different families of Nicholl have in all ages borne the pheons for their coat armour. The precise date of the settlement of the Nicholl family in Glamorganshire is not known; but from the will of John Nicholl, dated in 1598, and proved the following year, it is very evident they were a family of consequence, from the property they then possessed. John desires to be buried by his father, Iltyd Nicholl, in Llantwitt Church, which Iltyd, it is natural to suppose, was b. at Llantwitt, having been christened after the patron saint of Llantwitt, Saint Iltutus, or Iltyd. This Family of Hawkins.

The Hawkins's are a family of great antiquity in the county of Kent; the name being local, from the parish of Hawking, in the hundred of Folkestone, written at the time of the Saxons, Hawkyngge. The first of the name on record is Osbert de Hawking, temp. Henry II. About Edward III's. reign, the Hawkins's became seated at Nash Court, in the parish of Boughton-under-Blean, co. Kent, where they remained till 1800, when Thomas Hawkins, of Nash Court, Esq., died, and the estate became the property of his daughters, as co-heirs. Being of the Roman-catholic persuasion, they suffered greatly at different times; the seat of Nash was scandalously plundered by some of the neighbourhood in 1715, during the ferment the nation was thrown into on account of the rebellion in Scotland, when the furniture, pictures, and writings of the estate, were burnt, and an excellent library of books and the plate carried off, and never heard of afterwards. They experienced great losses at different periods from the time of Queen Elizabeth, when younger members of the family were obliged to quit Kent and become located in other counties: one branch settled, about 1554, in Cornwall, from which descended the late Sir Christopher Hawkins, Bart.; another, in Somersetshire, from which the present Sir John Cæsar Hawkins, Bart.; and a third was established in Wales, by the marriage, (19 Nov. 1742) of Henry Hawkins, Esq. of Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, London, b. in 1712, who m. Margaret, dau. of Anthony Montonnier,* Esq. of Llanedarn, co. Glamorgan, and sister and heir of Anthony Montonnier, Esq. of Newport, in Monmouthshire, who d. in Sept. 1788, aged 78. * The Morgans of Tymawr were a branch of the Morgans of Pen-y-coed Castle, in Monmouthshire, from whom also sprang the Morgans of Llantarnam. (See Burke's Extinct and Dormant Baronetcies.) By the marriage with the heiress of Morgan, the Nicholl family became resident at Tredunnock, in Monmouthshire.

† His property went, by will, to William Nicholl, Esq. of Tredunnock, and at his death, without male issue, it passed to Sir John Nicholl, Knt. of Merthymawr.

‡ The ancient family of Perrott derived their name from Castle Perrott, in Britanny, built in 957, by William de Perrott, whose great-grandson, Sir Richard Perrott, Seigneur de Perrott, in 1066, furnished William of Normandy with his quota of ships and men, accompanied the expedition to England, and settling in Somersetshire, commenced the building of a city, whose remains are North and South Perrott, between which the river Perrott rises and runs into the Severn. Sir Richard left issue by his wife, daughter of Sancho Ramyno, second king of Aragon, a son and heir, Sir Stephen Perrott, who, growing too powerful in the lands he inherited in Somersetshire, King Henry I. called him thence, and gave him as much territory as he could conquer in South Wales, which was then in confusion. He was thus forced to leave, with regret, the infant city his father had founded, and to which he had given the name of Perrott; but not being able to contest it with Henry, he went into Gloucestershire to raise forces. Not willing, however, to lead his troops into a country of which he knew nothing, he went to Wales in disguise, in order to view the state of it, and was there struck with the beauty of the Princess Helen, daughter and sole heir of Marchin, descended from Howel Dda, King of South Wales. She was no less charmed with his graceful stature, his amiable and majestic countenance, and most wonderful brilliant and piercing eye, which commanded reverence from all that beheld it. The conquest of this Princess, whom he married, gained him great part of that country, and the respect and love of the people. They had issue one son, Sir Andrew Perrott, Lord of Iystington, in Pembrokeshire, who claimed the kingdom of Wales in right of his mother, Helen, and collected a body of forces to defend his crown, but afterwards compromised the matter by having a grant of the land twenty miles round his camp; he built, on the very spot where his army was encamped, a castle, which he called Herbeth or Narbeth, in Pembrokeshire, and placed there a garrison to defend his lands, in the year 1112. These lands were afterwards converted into a forest, and is called the Forest of Narbeth. Sir Andrew left issue, Sir William, Lord of Iystington, and knight banneret, whose descendants continued to reside in Pembrokeshire until the heiress of the family conveyed the vast possessions into the Packington family. A younger son removed into Brecknockshire, and was ancestor of the Perrotts of that county, and also of those settled in Glamorganshire at Gellygare, one of whom, the Rev. Gregory Perrott, who had property at Gellygare, in the county of Glamorgan, and at Bedwelty, in the county of Monmouth, born A.D. 1655, rector of Llandegveth, in the county of Monmouth, died 7 Sept. 1743, aged 86, and was buried in the chancel at Llandegveth, leaving (by Blanch, his wife, daughter of William Lewis, Esq. of Kilvanhanghod, in Glamorganshire) an eldest son and heir, the Rev. Gregory Perrott, rector of Gellygare, born in 1700, who died 28 Dec. 1756, leaving, by Jane, his wife, dau. of — Dale, and widow of David Williams, Esq. of Llandegveth, one son and one dau. Turberville of Coety Castle & Penlline.

This ancient and knightly family (the most powerful of all the Normans that settled in Glamorganshire) were, previous to their advent into that county, Lords of Crûg Howell, (now written Crickhowell,) in Brecknockshire, which they obtained at the conquest of Brecknock, from Sir Bernard Newmarch, the Norman knight, who, in the early part of WILLIAM RUFUS'S reign, entered Brecknockshire, and won the lordship from the then possessor, Bleddyn ap Maenyrck, a Welsh prince.

Sir Payn de Turberville, was one of the twelve knights who accompanied Sir Robert Fitz Hammon to the aid of Jestyn ap Gwrgant, Prince of Glamorgan, against Rhys, Prince of South Wales, about the year 1090. Subsequently, on the death of Rhys, Fitz Hammon, turning his forces against Jestyn, and conquering his whole dominion, divided it amongst his followers. To the share of Sir Payn de Turberville were allotted the castle and lordship of Coyty, and he confirmed his right by marrying the heiress of the last possessor, a descendant of Jestyn ap Gwrgant. Sir Payn had three sons, and was s. by the eldest,

Lineage.

This family is descended from a Cornish stock, of considerable antiquity, whose patronymic has been written at different periods, Nicholls, Nichols, Nicols, Nycolls, Nicholl, Nicoll, Nicol, Nickell, &c. &c., all of which are derived from Nigel, or Fitz-Nigel, a Norman warrior, who accompanied the Conqueror into Britain, in 1066, and to whom was assigned twenty-three manors in Cornwall, besides considerable estates in Devon, Bucks, Bedford, Essex, and Northamptonshire. This is corroborated by the Doomsday Survey, taken in 1082, which shews that the manors of Gloeret, Nuntchest, Trevoge, Guardavalar, Rosininvet, Trevoet, and others, in Cornwall, with several manors in Devonshire, were at that time in Nigel's possession. How or when, these extensive domains became alienated from his descendants, cannot now be traced, but the Nicholls' family continued to retain considerable property and influence in Cornwall, to a recent date, various branches of it having been seated in the parishes of St. Kew, St. Tudy, St. Teath, Davidstowe, Madron, &c., where the numerous monuments which have been erected to their memory shew them to have formed alliances with the families of Mohun, Prideaux, Coorle, Moyle, Giffard, Rous, Roscarroch, Specott, Glynn, Scawen, Tremayne, Trevennor, Tredenham, Wrey, Godolphin, &c.

Nicholls of Trewane, in the parish of St. Kew, has usually been regarded as the elder branch of the Cornish family, and Norden, in his topographical description of Cornwall, speaks of Trewarne House, as the seat of the Nicholls or Nicoll family, from a remote period. They bore for arms "sa., three pheons, arg.," which was confirmed by Camden, but the line became extinct at Trewane, upon the death of John Nicholls, in 1709, leaving an only dau. and heiress, who m. Glynn, of Glynn, and who having d. s. p., bequeathed her lands to Thomas Glynn, of Helstone, from whom they have since passed to the Rev. Richard-Gerveys Grylls, of the same place. This branch of the Nicholls, family was, however, continued to a late period, through Francis, the second son of John Nicholls of Trewane, who m. Bridget, dau. of William Pearce, of Trewinnow, by which union he became possessed of the manor and estate of Davidstowe, in the parish of the same name. This Francis Nicholls, who was a barrister-at-law of the Middle Temple, was buried in Davidstowe Church, in 1674, and s. by his son John, high-sheriff for the co. in 1672, who m. Eliza, eldest dau. and co-heiress of Sir John Tredenham, by Elizabeth, his wife, dau. of Sir Edward Seymour, of Berry Pomeroy, co. Devon, Bart. The descendant in the second degree of this marriage, Elizabeth, sister and heiress of John Nicholls, of Davidstowe, m. Nicholas Glynn, of Glynn, and by him was mother of an only son, William, b. in 1735, but who, having d. unm., she sold Davidstowe to her relative, Hinder Pearce, Esq.

Nicholls, of Bodunnan, in the parish of St. Teath, was nearly related to the Trewane family. This branch likewise possessed Bodween, in the parish of St. Tudy, the ancient seat of the baronial family of Cheney, and which Norden describes as the property and seat of Thomas Nicholls, Esq., but the descent having terminated in an heiress, who m. Beale, of Trehannick, about the close of the 17th century, these estates passed into that family.

Another branch was for many generations seated at Penrose, where the mansion was rebuilt, in 1640, by Anthony Nicholls, who, during the reign of Charles I., engaged zealously in the Royal cause. He served in Parliament for Bossiney, in the 15th of that monarch, and was one of the eleven members who, in 1646, were put under restraint, and was afterwards ordered to be brought to trial, for high treason, but he effected his escape to his native county, where he d. in 1649, and was buried in the parish church of St. Tudy, where there is a monument to his memory. His son and heir, Anthony, M.P. in the second and third years of the Commonwealth, and high-sheriff of the co. in 1657, d. in 1678, leaving (by his wife, the dau. of Sir William Wrey, Bart. of Trebitch) five sons, two of whom were buried with their father, in the Savoy Church, London, and two in St. Tudy. The only surviving son sold the family estates in Cornwall to John Trehawke, Esq., through whom they have descended to Samuel Kekewich, Esq. of Peamore, Devon.

Treriefe, in the parish of Maddern, was likewise the seat of a member of the Nicholls' family, who bore the same arms as that of Trewane, and must have been an offset from that house, at a remote period, as it had been seated at Treriefe long anterior to the time of Elizabeth, during whose reign, Nicholls of Treriefe m. a dau. of Fleming, of Londithy, by which marriage he became possessed of the tithes of Maddern parish. In the reign of Charles II., William Nicholls, of Treriefe, m. Eliza, one of the daus. and co-heirs of Col. William Godolphin, of Trewarveneth, in the parish of St. Paul, by whom he had several sons. From an elegant monument to his memory, in Maddern Church, it appears, that John, the elder, d. in 1714, leaving a dau. and three sons; from the youngest descended Doctor Francis Nicholls, Physician to George II.; and from the eldest descended, William Nicholls, of Treriefe, who m. Mary, dau. of William Ustick, of Botallack, Esq., and by her had an only son, William-John Godolphin, who d. unm. in 1815, when the family estates passed to his mother, who subsequently m. the Rev. C. V. Legrice. The second son of William Nicholls, and Eliza Godolphin,

Philip Nicholls, Esq., m. a dau. of William Praed, Esq. of Trevethan, in the parish of Selant, and by her had a son, William Nicholls, Esq., who, at his decease, left three sons, I. Richard, m. Mary Smith, of the parish of St. Kevern, and had, with three daus., a son, Richard Nicholls, Esq. of Lannar, in the parish of St. Anthony, Meneague, who is believed to be the only male descendant, now resident in Cornwall, of this once numerous family; II. Solomon; and III. William. The second son,

Solomon Nicholls, Esq., m. Grace, dau. of John Nicholas, Esq. of Trenithen, by Mary, his wife, dau. of John Sandys, Esq. of Lanarth, and by her had six children, of whom John d. without leaving issue, the youngest, William, of Trebah, in the parish of St. Constantine, d. unm., and the eldest,

Solomon Nicholls, Esq., m. in 1780, his cousin, Jane, dau. of George Millett, Esq. of Hilstone, by Anne, his wife, dau. of Sampson Sandys, Esq. of Lanarth, and Grugeth. Of this marriage, two sons only survive, viz.,

I. George Nicholls, Esq. of London, poor-law commissioner, who m. in 1813, Harriet, dau. of Brough Maltby, Esq. of Skelton, co. Notts, by whom he has, with seven daus., one son, Henry-George.

He also held the same rank, together with that of Adjutant, successively in the Warrington Volunteers and Local Militia.

Lineage.

The ancestors of this family were seated, from a very early period, in the north of Lancashire, where they maintained a highly respectable position. The immediate progenitor of the branch before us, was

He had been promoted, through the interest of his relative, Gen. Burgoyne, to a cornetcy in the Queen's Light Dragoons, but by some strange accident, the notification of this preferment was not despatched at the period it should have been, and did not, in consequence, arrive in time (as it otherwise would have done) to prevent his embarking on an expedition from Jamaica, in the course of which he lost his life. Instead, therefore, of the joyful return looked for by his friends in England, came the sad tidings of his decease, accompanied with the highest testimonials of character from the whole corps of officers with whom he had served.

The original name of the Busvargus family was Lethon. John Lethon having purchased the estate of Busvargus, (which name signifies, in the Cornish language, "The house on the top of the wood,") in the parish of St. Just, in Penwith, first adopted the name of Busvargus as an alias, but soon afterwards abandoned that of Lethon altogether. Lineage.

The surname of this ancient family is local, as are all ancient Scottish cognomens, and was derived from the lands of Nisbet, in the shire of Berwick, which, says Nisbet, the learned author of the System of Heraldry, "were of an ancient denomination; for in the donation of King Edgar, the son of Malcolm Kanmore, (in whose reign surnames came first to be hereditary,) to the monks of Dumfermling, to pray for the soul of his father, and for the health of his own, among other lands he gives these of Nisbet, at least the patronage of that church called East Nisbet, (of late Elmbank,) and the Teinds of Nisbet, (afterwards called West Nisbet,) where the castle of Nisbet stood memorable in our histories for the fatal overthrow the English gave, by the assistance of the then rebel Earl of March, to the flower of the youth of the Lothians." In the reign of David I., Philip De Nesbyth occurs as a witness to that king's deed, which he made to the religious at Coldinghame, and in the time of King Malcolm, Willielmus de Nesbyth attested a charter to the monks of Durham. The name of Philip de Nisbet appears in the bond of submission given by the barons of Scotland to Edward I. of England, in the year 1296, and under David II., Adam Nisbet, of that ilk, acted a distinguished part. The chief line, the Nisbets of that ilk, continued to flourish, in high repute, for a succession of generations, until the civil wars of the time of Charles I., when, devoting themselves to the royal cause, they suffered confiscation and death. Sir Philip Nesbitt, of that ilk, colonel of a regiment for the king, and lieut.-governor of Newark-upon-Trent, when besieged by the Scots' Covenanters, fought with the gallant Montrose, and was at length taken prisoner at Philiphaugh, tried, found guilty, and decapitated at Glasgow, 28 Oct. 1646. Sir Philip's nephew, the last male representative in the direct line of Nisbet of that ilk, was Alexander Nisbet, the heraldic author. Several eminent families branched off, at various periods, from the chief stock, the Nisbets of Paxstoun; the Nisbets of Spittle; the Nisbets of Swinewood; the Nisbets of Dalziel; the Nisbets of Johnstoun; the Nisbets of Dean; the Nisbets of Craigintennies; and the Nisbets of Dirleton. Of the last line, of which was the famous lawyer, Sir John Nisbet, of Dirletoun, one of the senators of the College of Justice, and advocate to King Charles II., the house of Woodhill is a scion.

This family has been settled in Ireland since the subjugation of that country by HENRY II. Its founder,

SIR GILBERT DE NUGENT, one of the knights who accompanied Hugh de Lacie in the expedition to Ireland, having m. Rosa, sister of the said Hugh, obtained the lordship of Delvin, but his sons predeceasing him, he was s. at his decease by his brother,

RICHARD NUGENT, whose only dau. and heiress carried the barony of Delvin into the family of Johns, or Jones, into which she married, and it so remained until brought back by the intermarriage of

SIR WILLIAM NUGENT, of Balrath, descended from Christopher Nugent, Esq., the third brother of Sir Gilbert, with Catherine, dau. and heiress of John FitzJones, Baron of Delvin. This Sir William was elected, 10 Nov. 1401, sheriff of Meath, by the county, in which office he was confirmed by the king, for one year, and again during pleasure, by patent, 21 Nov. 1402. He was s. at his decease by his eldest son,

Lineage.

The very ancient Anglo-Norman house of SAVAGE, which Mr. Nugent paternally represents, was settled at Portaferry, co. Down, since the time of the first conquest of Ireland by John de Courcy, Earl of Ulster, in 1117. Under that famous warrior, the original ancestor in Ireland established himself in the county of Down; and by a written document, dated 1 Sept. 1205, in the Tower of London, we find "Robin, son of William Savage, named as one of De Courcy's hostages for his appearance before King JOHN." The present Barony of Lecale was anciently termed the Territory of the Savages, wherein, at Ardglass, they and their dependants erected seven castles, the ruins of which are still extant. It appears, also, that a stately monastery of Dominicans was founded at Newtown, in the Little Ards, A.D. 1244, by the Savages, "gentlemen of English extraction."

From the extreme scarcity of records in Ireland, it is impossible, at this remote period, to determine, without liability to error, which is the senior branch of the family, that of PORTAFERRY or ARDKEEN CASTLE.

In 1400, HENRY IV. granted to Robert-Fitzjordan Savage the office of sheriff of the Ardes; and it appears by an indenture in the Public Records, dated 31 May, 1538, made between Leonard Grey, Lord Deputy, and Raymund Savage, Chieftain of his Clan, "that Raymund should have the chieftainship and superiority of his sept in the Territory of the Savages, otherwise called Lecale;" but, in 1559, "the Lord Deputy, Sir William Fitzwilliam, made a division between Roland and Raymund Savage of several towns and territories in the Ardes." Now by pedigree annexed, Roland, in 1572, was in possession of Portaferry Castle, and styled himself "Lord of the Little Ards, and Principalis suæ Nationis;"* and the Lord Deputy Chichester, some years afterwards, addressed him as such by letter. The Ardkeen family, whose clan, or sept, were by the Irish called, "Slut ne Teneschall,"† (that is, "offspring of the seneschal,") "avoucheth their first ancestor to have been seneschal over all Ulster; yet it would seem likely that this family has risen from a second brother of Savage of Portaferry &c., who, before Queen ELIZABETH'S reign, had some territories in the Barony of Lecale, and also in the county Antrim,‡ (as is credibly asserted,) that family being always sore enemies to the O'Neils; and in those days this house of Ardchin had, it may be, the appointment of seneschal, the office being then honourable, though now despised; and they had the lands they now, and which their cadets lately did, possess from the said Lords of the Little Ards, as is supposed, though they now hold only of the crown. Moreover, that which makes the descent of Ardchin from Portaferry more probable is, that these Savages give the same coat armorial with the said lords, without any distinction that I can perceive by their seals; and although Portaferry hath had the precedency for a long time, yet Ardchin pays him no chief rent; but as to the right of precedency, or as to the antiquity of these two families, I cannot determine; neither will I assert anything which may make discord among these good friends, or may savour of partiality in myself."

However, the mutual mention of one another, the exact coincidence of their armorial bearings, and the Christian names of their respective progenitors, may be received as presumptive evidence in favour of a common ancestry, so far back as the twelfth century. We find, A.D. 1325,§ EDWARD II. granted the office of sheriff during pleasure, amongst others, to Robert Savage, for the county of Coulrath, i.e. Coleraine. In 1350‖ dwelled in Ulster, "Sir Robert Savage, a wealthy knight, who, the rather to preserve his own, began to wall and fortify his manor-houses with castles and plyes against the Irish enemy, exhorting his heir (Sir Henry Savage¶) to intend that work, so beneficial for himself and his posterity. 'Father,' quoth he, 'I remember the proverb, "better a castle of bones than of stones," where strength and courage of valiant men are to help us. Never will I, by the grace of God, number myself with dead walls; my fort shall be where-soever young bloods be stirring, and where I find room to fight.' The father, in a fume, let lie the building, and forswore it; but yet the want thereof, and such like, hath been the decay as well of the Savages as of all the English gentlemen in Ulster, as the lack of walled towns is also the principal occasion of the rudeness and wildness in other parts of Ireland. This Savage, having prepared an army against the Irish, allowed to every soldier, before he buckled with the enemy, a mighty draught of aqua vitæ, wine, or old ale, and killed, in provision for their return, beeves, venison, and fowl in great plenty; which diverse of his captains misliked, and, considering the success of war to be uncertain, esteemed it better policy to poison the cates, or to do them away, than to cherish a sort of catins with princely food, if aught should happen to themselves in this adventure of so few against so many. Hereat smiled the gentleman, and said, 'Tush! ye are too full of envy. This world is but an inn, whereunto you have no special interest, but are only tenants at the will of the Lord. If it please him to command us from it, as it were from our lodging, and to set other good fellows in our rooms, what hurt shall it be for us to leave them some meat for their suppers? Let them hardly win it and wear it. If they enter our dwellings, good manners would no less but to welcome them with such fare as the country breedeth, and, with all my heart, much good may it do them. Notwithstanding, I presume so far upon your noble courage, that verily my mind giveth me, that we shall return at night, and banquet ourselves with our own store.' And so they did, having slain three thousand Irish-men."* This battle was fought in 1353, on the town land of Bally Savage,† in the parish of Dunagore, adjoining Antrim. Sir Robert Savage resided at the castle of Lisannoure, on the banks of Lough Guile, co. Antrim; which castle was founded, tradition states, by Sir Philip Savage, in the reign of King JOHN. It was afterwards held by the O'Haras, and by them sold to the Macartneys, who now hold it. The greatest part of the old tower, or keep, was standing in 1825.‡ Sir Robert Savage d. in 1360, and was interred in the Dominican friary, Coleraine, leaving the reputation of an excellent soldier. There was also a colony of Savages settled at Carrickfergus,§ wherein was situated Castle Savage, the foundation of which was visible in levelling the ground in 1838.

The surname of O'Connell, according to the authority of Irish writers, emanated from Conal Gabhra, an ancient Prince of the royal line of HEBER, son of MILESIUS, from whom likewise the districts of Upper and Lower Connelloe, co. From this district the O'Connells removed to Iveragh, in the western extremity of Kerry, and remained there for a considerable period, until the rebellion of 1641 transplanted them, with many other victims of that disastrous event, to the county of Clare.

Lineage.

Eochoid Morghmeodhin, the son of Muireadhach Tireach, d. King of Ireland, A.D. 366, leaving issue several sons, of whom three are particularly noticed in the Irish annals, viz., Brian, (whose youngest son, Duach Galach, first Christian King of Connaught in 436, was ancestor of the O'Conors,) Fiachra, and Nial. From these are descended the Hi Bruin, Hi Fiachra, and Hi Nial, families of Ireland. The most powerful, the Hi Bruins, divided into several branches, the most distinguished of which was known by the name of clan Muireadharg, in memory of Murieadhach Muillethan, who d. King of Connaught in 702.

Conchobhar, alias Conor, who d. King of Connaught in 973, was the ninth generation from Muiredaigh Muillethan, and from him the principal branch of clan Muireadhaigh took the name of O'Conor — that is, the descendants of Conor, or Conchobhar, who d. in 973. They are continually distinguished by that name from the year 1012. Feigh, their chieftain, who d. in 1030, is called Taadhg-u-Conchobhar, head of clan Muireadhaigh, or siol Muireadhaigh—clan and siol being nearly synonymous.

In the 12th century, this family became the most powerful in Ireland; from being provincial kings of Connaught, their chiefs became sovereigns of all Ireland. Tordhellach O'Conor was received as supreme king of all Ireland, in 1136, and reigned twenty years, to 1156, when he died. He left two sons, Roderick, the last monarch of Ireland, and Cathal Croibh-dearg, or Cathal of the Red Hand. Roderick's history is well known. In 1175, his chancellor, Laurence O'Toole, signed the treaty of Windsor with King Henry II., which may be seen in Rymer. By this treaty, he resigned the supreme monarchy to Henry II., reserving Connaught as an independent kingdom to himself. Connaught then included the present county of Clare, and extended from Limerick to the river Drobhais, which separates Connaught from Ulster. Roderick's descendants became extinct in the person of Connor Moenmor O'Conor; and from his brother, Cathal, of the Red Hand, who d. in 1224, directly descends, O'Conor Don, present head of the family.

Cathal or Charles Croibh-dhearg, next brother of Roderick O'Conor, monarch of Ireland, who d. in 1198, was elected to the sovereignty after the decease of Conor Maon Voy O'Conor, who d. in 1189, and became the rallying point for all who wished to free their country from foreign usurpation. Leland declares that "his successes against the English raised a dangerous spirit amongst the Irish chieftains, his countrymen expecting nothing less from him than the extirpation of their enemies." In the traditionary tales of the lower orders, Cathal was long represented "as the terror of the foreigner, the destroyer of their castles, who never paid tribute to strangers, nor the sons of strangers, and who was one of the greatest heroes of the Milesian race." The Annals of Innisfail, and, indeed, all the Irish chronicles, speak largely in his praise. After having long resisted the encroachments of the English, he resigned the government of Connaught to his son, and retired to the abbey of Knockmay, which he had himself founded, and where he d. in 1224. He had m. More, dau. of Donald O'Brien, King of Munster, and left, with a younger son, Felim, who was summoned in 1244 to attend King Henry III. in his expedition against the Scots, an elder son,

Hugh O'Conor, to whom his father had surrendered the sovereignty of Connaught. Harassed by the hostility of the English, who raised a rival claimant to the throne, Hugh was driven from his native province, and treacherously slain at the court of Geoffrey de Marisco, where he had sought refuge. By Ranalt, his wife, dau. of Awly O'Ferrall, King of Conmarene, he had, with a dau., Agnes, wife of Richard de Burgho, Lord Justice of Ireland in 1227, ancestor of the Earls of Ulster, five sons, the eldest of whom was Roderick, father of Owen na Palise, of whom presently. Hugh's death occurred in 1228, and thereupon his brother Felim was called to succeed him. This prince, in 1240, went to the court of England to complain of the English, who, under the De Burgos, endeavoured to usurp several portions of his province. He appealed to the treaty of Windsor, executed in 1175, between Henry II. and Roderick O'Conor; the English monarch promised him redress, and the attentions which Felim received won his confidence and gratitude. He was summoned in the year 1244 to attend King Henry III. in his expedition against the Scots, by the designation of "Felim O'Conor filius Cathalis Crobh-dearg O'Conor, Regis Connactiæ." He was, however, still harassed by the English. In 1255, he sent the Archbishop of Tuam, with other ambassadors, to England, and in 1257, obtained a royal charter guaranteeing to him and his heirs for ever, free and peaceable dominion over five baronies, in as ample a manner as they were ever enjoyed by his ancestors. He subsequently built the magnificent abbeys of Roscommon and Timona, and d. in 1264. Matthew Paris gives an interesting account of the complaints which Felim preferred to the court of England against the De Burgos, and other English settlers, and the orders of HENRY to his deputy, Maurice, and to all those in power in Ireland, to "exterminate John De Burgo, and re-establish the King of Connaught in his own kingdom." Felim was interred in the abbey of Roscommon, and his monument, though much defaced, is still to be seen there. HUGH, the son of Felim, succeeded, and for ten years carried on an unsuccessful warfare against the English. He d. in 1274, whereupon his cousin,

OWEN NA PALISE (Owen of the Palace) O'CONOR, (son of Roderick O'Conor, drowned in the Shannon, in 1244, and grandson of Hugh O'Conor, King of Connaught, murdered in 1228,) s. to the throne. His sovereignty was but short; he reigned only three months, being slain in 1275, in a domestic feud. His son,

HUGH O'CONOR, was elected King of Connaught in 1293. He was slain in 1309, leaving three sons, I. TIRLAGH; II. Felim, described by Leland "as a youth distinguished for military genius:" he commanded the Irish army at the memorable battle of Athenry, where, with almost the whole of the O'Conors, he fell, gallantly upholding the liberty of his country. Felim's son, Hugh O'Conor, Lord of Connaught, was father of Tirlagh Roe O'Conor, ancestor of the family of O'CONOR ROE; III. Cahil. The eldest son,

TIRLAGH O'CONOR, governed Connaught for 21 years. He d. in 1345, leaving, with several younger sons,

HUGH O'CONOR, King of Connaught, who d. in 1356. leaving several sons, of whom TIRLAGH was the eldest; Charles, the third, had two sons, Rory and Charles; and Owen, the fourth, had several sons. The eldest son,

TIRLAGH DON (or the Dark) O'CONOR, from whom, according to some, proceeded the appellation of O'Conor Don.* He still continued the war against the English, and defeated and killed their commander, the Earl of Desmond. On the arrival, however, of RICHARD II. in Ireland, Tirlagh submitted to that prince, and was received by him with marked attention. On his return to his province, Tirlagh found his followers in arms against his authority, headed by his cousin, Tirlagh Roe O'Conor. The contests thus created were finally arranged by the partition of the government of Connaught between the two competitors. This division of power, caused chiefly by English influence, was the ruin of kingly government in Connaught. Tirlagh d. in 1406, having had three sons, I. FELIM GEANGACH, his heir; II. Hugh, whose son, Hugh Caoch O'Conor, left four sons, Manus, Rory, Murtach, and Hugh. The eldest son,

FELIM GEANGACH (or the Crooked) O'CONOR DON, Prince of the Maghery, or Plain of Connaught, d. in 1474, and was s. by his eldest son,

OWEN CAOCH (the Blind) O'CONOR DON, Prince of the Maghery, who d. in 1485, aged 55, in his castle of Ballintobber. He was father of

CARBRY O'CONOR DON, who d. at Ballintobber, in 1526, leaving four sons, I. DERMOT MIOL MACHAIRE, his heir; II. Toole, who m. Ellis Kelly, of Lisdalon, and was father of Dudley O'Conor, whose son, Felim, left a son, Conor O'Conor, who m. and left two sons, Dermot and Felim; III. Torlogh-Owen-Coach; and IV. Felim. The eldest son,

DERMOT-MIOL-MACHAIRE O'CONOR DON, of Ballintobber, m. Dorothea, dau. of Torlagh O'Conor Roe, and d. in 1584, leaving a son and heir,

SIR HUGH O'CONOR DON, of Ballintobber, b. in 1541, who having submitted to Queen ELIZABETH in 1585, compounded with the Lord-deputy Perrott for all his estates, and was knighted by Robert, Earl of Essex, 24 July, 1599. In the Tyrone war he joined the Queen's forces, and commanded the horse at the battle of the Curliews, known to the lower Irish as the battle of Duneveeragh. DANIEL O'CONOR, who followed CHARLES II. in exile, and returned at the Restoration; the only one, however, of his estates that was returned to him was CLONALIS. He d. in 1667, at Clonalis, leaving by Anne Birmingham, his wife, dau. of Lord Athenry, one son,

ANDREW O'CONOR, of Clonalis, co. Roscommon, who became O'CONOR DON. He m. 3 March, 1692, Honora, dau. of Col. MAJOR OWEN O'CONOR, of Belanagare, who followed the fortunes of CHARLES II., and was appointed major in the Duke of Gloucester's regt. He held, subsequently, a troop in Kilcash's dragoons, and was made governor of Athlone by JAMES II., but being sent to England with the forces destined to oppose the landing of William of Orange, he was taken prisoner and confined in the castle of Chester, where he d. in 1692. DENIS O'CONOR, Esq. of Belanagare, b. in 1674, who was involved in the troubles and misfortunes which seemed, at that period, the common inheritance of all who professed the Catholic religion. Suits were instituted for the sequestration of his paternal estates, and he was happy to preserve a portion by the sacrifice of the rest. Denis O'Conor, though left but a small fragment of the once broad domains of his ancestors—domains which were guaranteed by several solemn and indisputable treaties—was still the supporter of all, whose virtues or distresses had a claim upon his bounty. The traditions of the country still attest his unostentatious benevolence and hospitality; and the effusions of the bards record the virtues of his character. At Belanagare it was that Carolan composed the most impassioned of his melodies, and with emotions of gratitude to his host, swept along the strings of his harp his "Donagh Cahil Oig," singing extempore the glories of the Milesian race, and the merits of their descendant. "I think," said Carolan, on one occasion, "that when I am among the O'Conors, the harp has the old sound in it." CHARLES O'CONOR, Esq. of Belanagare, b. in 1710, a learned and distinguished antiquary, early devoted his attention to elucidating the history of his country, and unfolding the long neglected records of her people, and with indefatigable research and labour, collected the most valuable information regarding the history and antiquities of Ireland. He also took a prominent place among those who first struggled for Catholic emancipation. O'DONOGHUE OF THE GLYNS, CO. KERRY.

The present representative of this ancient Irish sept is a minor, the son and heir of the late CHARLES O'DONOGHUE, of the Glyns, chief of the name, by Jane, his wife, dau. of John O'Connell, Esq. of Grena. (See p. 948.)

O'DONOVAN OF CLANCAHILL.

O'DONOVAN, MORGAN-WILLIAM, Chieftain of the ancient Irish sept of O'Donovan of Clancahill, Barrister-at-Law, b. in Aug. 1796; s. his father in 1839.

Lineage.

This sept is one of the oldest among the aboriginal Irish, and in ancient times possessed an extensive territory called the Cantred of Hy Dunobhau, situated between the present towns of Bantry, Dunmanway, Rosscarbery, and Skibbereen, in the south-west of the co. of Cork, of parts of which the estates of the chieftains of the late and present lines consist. Keatinge traces its descent from the oldest branches of his Hibernian genealogy, and places their escutcheon as thirteenth in his armorial tables. Mr. Gough, in his edition of Camden's "Britannia," following the account given by Dr. Smith, the historian of the county of Cork, published in 1750, says—"The Irish antiquarians allow but eight families of royal extraction in Munster, of which they place four in Carbery, which comprehended all the south-west part of this county, (Cork,) and these were, beside the MacCarthys, O'Mahon, or Mahown, O'Donovan, and O'Driscol. The family of O'Donovan is allowed to be of royal extraction. Their territory in this county went formerly by the name of Clancahill, a part of West Carbery, comprehending the large and mountainous parish of Dromaleague and other tracts, in which parish they had their chief residence at Castle Donovan. This family came hither from a barony in the county of Limerick, called Coshma, where they built the famous Castle of Crom, which afterwards fell to the Kildare family, and from which the motto, 'Crom-a-boo,' still used by that noble house, was taken. The representative of this ancient family has his seat at Banlaghan, in West Carbery." Beside Castle Donovan, he says, the castles of Banduff and Rahine also belonged to them: those of Gortnaclogh, Ivor or Ire, and others, were theirs of old.

By marriage the O'Donovans have been allied to the noble houses of Kildare, Clanricarde, Clancarthy, (MacCarthy,) Barrymore, and Riversdale, and with the families of O'Shaughnessye, Kearny, Becher, and others of distinction in the county of Cork.

It appears from the original pleading and judgment in a suit before Lord Chancellor Adam Loftus, decided by him in 1592, that "Donell O'Donovan, son of Donell M'Teige, surnamed 'na-g-Croicean,' by Ellen ny-Leary, his wife, had proved the custom and his lawful election in 1584, as O'Donovan, in succession to his father, who died, seised of the lordshipp and hereditaments of Clancahell, being a customary lordshipp, and that Sir Owen MacCartie Reagh was chieftaine of Carbrie by right, and not by usurpation, when he delivered a rodd to Donell, now 'O'Donovan;' and Donell being the elder brother of Teige—the complainants being both born of one father and mother after marriage, dulie celebrated, &c.,—he had best right to inherit or succeed his said father, and to be 'O'Donovan,' and to have and enjoie the lordshipp, lands, tenements, and hereditaments of Clancahell. And it was soe adjudged, &c. Yeoven at Dublin the 12th daie of February, Ano. Dno. 1592. Ad. Loftus, Canc."

This DONELL, recognised by Lord Chancellor Adam Loftus as chieftain lawfully inaugurated according to the Irish custom, surrendered his territory of Clancahill to King JAMES I. in 1608, and received a re-grant of the entire of it in 1615. He lived at his castle of Rahine and rebuilt Castle Donovan in 1626, as appears by an inscription there. His last will, now in the Prerogative Office, is dated in 1629. He was buried in the abbey of Tymoleague. By his wife, Joanna, dau. of Sir Owen MacCartie Reagh, chieftain of Carbery, he had seven sons, viz.,

I. DANIEL, his heir.
II. TEIGE, of Rahine and Drishane, of whom below.
III. Murrogh, of Carrigarruffe, who had a son, Daniel, and a dau., Inan.
IV. Donogh, who had a son, Teige, who m. his cousin, Honora, dau. of his uncle Dermod.
V. Dermod.
VI. Richard, who had two sons, Murrogh and Daniel.
VII. Keadagh.
I. Honora.

In original letter, dated Sept. 1665, from Lady Clanricarde, to James, Duke of Ormonde, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, states that two of the above brothers were, Captaines, and one of them, with his companie, totally slaine with his grace at the siege of Dublin at Rathmaines, and the other slaine in his majestie's service beyond seas." Donell died about 1638, and was succeeded by his eldest son and heir,

DANIEL O'DONOVAN, who m. Gylles, dau. of Sir Roger O'Shaughnessye, Knt. of the co. Galway.

In the great civil war, this chieftain was stripped of all his estates, a part only of which were restored to his son under CHARLES II. He d. in 1660, and by his marriage left one son,

DANIEL O'DONOVAN, colonel in the service of King JAMES II., in whose parliament he sat for the borough of Baltimore, of which he was also portreeve. He distinguished himself in the civil war of 1689 by his zealous and steady exertions in the cause of King JAMES; among other actions, defending Charlesford, at Kinsale, with vigour. He surrendered the keys of it into the hand of the Earl of Marlborough's own hand, and finally made honourable terms with the successful party. He m. 1st, Victoria, dau. of Captain Coppinger, by whom he had an only child, Helena, who m. her cousin, Cornelius MacMurrogh O'Donovan, (see below,) and 2ndly, Elizabeth, dau., by his wife, Elizabeth Becher, of Major Tonson, ancestor of the Viscounts Riversdale, by whom he had, I. Daniel; II. Barry, both d. young; III. RICHARD, his successor; IV. Cornelius, who d. in 1737. Dying at Banlaghan in 1705, Col. O'Donovan was s. by his son,

RICHARD O'DONOVAN, who m. in 1703, Ellinor Fitzgerald, dau. of the Knight of Kerry, by whom he had an only son, DANIEL, and a dau., Elizabeth, who m. Sylvester O'Sullivan, called MacFineen Duff, of the co. Kerry, who left issue. On his death he was s. by his son,

DANIEL O'DONOVAN, who, in 172—, m. 1st, Anne, dau. of James Kearny, Esq. of Garrettstown, in the co. Cork, by whom he had no issue; and 2ndly, in 1763, Jane, dau. of John Becher, of Hollybrook, by his wife, Frances Eyre, by whom he left issue,

I. RICHARD, b. in 1768, lieut.-gen. in the army, m. Emma-Ann Powell, by whom he had no children.
II. John, in the army, killed in 1796, in the Maroon war, in Jamaica, unm.
I. Helen, m. to John, son of Sir Robert Warren, Bart., d. s. p. in 1840.
II. Jane, d. unm. in 1833.

Daniel O'Donovan, by his last will, dated 1770, devised a remainder in his estates, on failure of the male issue of his two sons, Richard and John, "to his kinsman, Morgan Donovan, Esq. of the city of Cork." He did so to fulfil a mutual agreement between this Morgan's father and him, that on failure of the male issue of either branch, the survivor should inherit, in order to unite the family estates.

GENERAL RICHARD O'DONOVAN, the last male of the family of Banlaghan, served with honour in the 6th Dragoons in the campaigns in Flanders and Spain. He d. in 1829, when this ancient chieftainry reverted to the descendants of the second son of Donell, chieftain, who d. in 1638. His line is thus deduced:

TEIGE, of Rahine and Drishane, who m. Joane Gaggin, had issue,

I. Daniel-M'Teige, d. s. p.
II. MURROGH.
I. Joane. II. Ellen. III. Eiline. IV. Shilie.
V. Honora, m. to Dermod Anglin, d. in 167—.

He d. in 1639, and ultimately was s. by his son,

MURROGH DONOVAN, of Litturlicky, who m. Jane Galway, by whom he had seven sons. The eldest son,

* The heads of the old Irish families are thus distinguished, par excellence, from the derivative branches. The O'Conor Don, the O'Grady, and the O'Donogue, would feel as a degradation, and repel as an affront, the appellations of MR. and ESQUIRE, accorded by right of station, or by social courtesy, to those whom birth, education, or position, have raised above the lower classes of life. Extremes thus meet, and the haughty chieftain, spurning such hacknied titles, is addressed by his simple surname, like the humblest of his vassals—Honos aspernatus, gloriam intendit. The wife of O'Donoghue is always designated THE MADAME. These factitious distinctions of modern pride were unknown, or disdained, in the nobler era of Greece and Rome; nor was it until the degenerate days of Domitian, that the title of Dominus, rejected by the magnanimity of the first Cæsar, and by the policy of his immediate successors, was applied even to the emperors. It is with pain we read that unclassical and unroman epithet in the elegant pages of the younger Pliny, when addressing Trajan.

O'Grady, who s. his father in 1812, is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for the co. Limerick, of which he was high-sheriff in 1821.

Lineage.

The Milesian family of O'Grady is one of the most ancient, and, in the combination of its numerous divergent branches, probably the most opulent and powerful amongst the resident proprietors of the co. of Limerick. Dr. O'Brien, late Catholic Bishop of Cloyne, in his Irish and English Dictionary, p. 514, (see also Keating, vol. ii. p. 401, ed. 1809,) assigns Conal-Eachluath, King of Munster, anno 366, and sixth in descent from Oilliol-Olum, (of the race of Heber, the eldest son of Milesius, King of Spain, who colonized Ireland,) as the common ancestor of the O'Gradys and the O'Briens; but the latter having, subsequently, in the person of Brien Boroimhe, the renowned monarch of Ireland, established an ascendant power in North Munster, or Thomond, of which they became hereditary rulers, the O'Gradys acknowledged their paramount sway, and were arrayed as dynasts, or chiefs of a sept, under the banners of these provincial princes. General Vallancey, in his Dissertation on the Law of Tanistry, (Collect. part iv.,) states that Donal O'Brien fought the battle of Clara, in 1276, against his cousin, Mahon O'Brien, and the tribe called Cineal-Dongaile, whose chief was O'Grady; and in 1310, Dermod O'Brien, assisted by Sir Robert de Clare, reduced the O'Deas and O'Gradys, who were obliged, in their respective states, to aid him against his antagonist, Donogh O'Brien, the reigning King of Thomond, whom he dethroned and succeeded. We also find, at the close of the sixteenth century, the name of O'Grady conspicuous among the proprietors immediately around the city of Limerick, in the curious map of Ortellius, originally published by that geographer in his "Theatrum Orbis Terrarum, Antwerpiæ, 1595," and republished, with improvements, about fifty years ago, in Dublin. The O'Gradys diverging, in process of time, from the parent stock of Kilballyowen, spread into the various collateral branches of Cappercullen, Elton, Grange, Lodge, Rahan, Cahir, Mount Prospect, &c., preserving in all the highest degree of respectability, and allying with many of the most eminent of the nobility of their native land—the Marquises of Lansdowne, Donegal, and Headfort, the Earls of Ilchester and Dunraven, Lord Kinsale, &c.

In the interval between 1276 and 1310, the chieftainship of the sept vested in

Donald O'Grady, who fell in battle in 1309, leaving a son,

Hugh O'Grady, of Kilballyowen, lands acquired the same year in marriage with the dau. and heiress of O'Kerwick, chief of Aniah Cliah, and which have since remained the principal residence of his descendants. His son and heir, G'COLLA [O'KELLY] CLAN NA, OR THE CLAN-COLLA.

O'KELLY, GEORGE, of Ballysax, co. Kildare, Esq., a magistrate for the co. Kildare, is second son, unm., of George-Bourke O'Kelly, Esq., by Maria, his wife, eldest dau. and co-heiress of Pentheny of Tara, grandson of Edmund, by Anne, dau. of Bourke of Ardfort, great grandson of Edmund, who m. a dau. of Kavenagh of Durlas, surviving in the reign of JAMES II.

Lineage.

The great Sept of O'Kelly derives in direct line from MAINE MOR, and its descent is given in detail under O'KELLY OF SCREEN.

The rise and decline of this clan may be sketched as follows:—From the time of Cölla da Crioch to the Kings of Maine, the provinces of Connaught and of Leinster, in the 6th and in the 9th centuries, were ruled by princes or chiefs of the old clan Cölla. The counties or earldoms of Galway, Clare, Meath, Kildare, &c., were also in possession of chiefs of the same line of ancestry, prior to the time of the last King of Maine. Some minor principalities, as the Barony of Ossery (in the reign of Aodha or Hugh Allain) and others, are to be found under the head "Crioch," in the old alphabetical arrangements of Irish names of persons and places, that would be too numerous to insert here. From the time of the last King of Maine to Cölla O'Kelly, in the reign of Queen ELIZABETH, the importance of the Irish clans, and the power of their chiefs, had gradually declined. Of the fleet and the army of the last King of Maine, mention is made in the "Monasticon Hibernicum," p. 280, thus:—"The joint fleets of O'Rourke, King of Breifne, and O'Kelly, King of Maine, were sunk or dispersed in the Shannon, below Limerick, and the combined armies of these two powerful chiefs overthrown by the superior force of the King of Connaught." Campion, in his "Historie of Ireland," (p. 120,) relates an anecdote in the reign of EDWARD II. and the wars of BRUCE, quaintly illustrating the downfall of the old Irish chiefs, and the rise of the Norman nobility on the ruins of the indigenous or native aristocracy of Ireland, thus: "In the necke of all these troubles, arose foure princes of Connaught to scatter and impare the English force." Of these four chiefs, O'Kelly was the most powerful. But, in the words of Campion, "To Sir Richard Birmingham belonged a lusty young swayne, John Hussee, (Hussey,) whom his lord commanded to take a view of the dead carcases about the walles, and bring him word whether O'Kelly, his mortal foe, were slayne among them. Hussee passed forth, with one man, to turn up and pursue the bodies." This movement, observed by O'Kelly, drew from him the following proffer:—"'Hussee, thou seest I am at all points armed, and have my esquire, a manly man, besides me; thou art thin, and thy page a youngling—so that, if I loved thee not for thine own sake, I might betraye thee for thy master's: but come and serve me at my request, and I promise thee, by St. Patrick's staffe, to make thee a lord in Connaught of more ground than thy master hath in Ireland.' When these wordes waighed him nothing, his own man, a stout lubber, began to reprove him for not relenting to so rich a proffer, assured him with an oath. Nowe had Hussee three enemies; and first he turned to his own knave, and him he slew; next he raught O'Kelly's 'squire a great rappe under the pit of his eare, which overthrew him; thirdly, he bestirred himself so nimbly, that ere any helpe could be hoped for, he had also slayne O'Kelly; and perceiving breath in the 'squire, he drawed him up againe, and forced him upon a truncheon to beare his lord's head into the high towne; which presented to Birmingham, and the circumstances declared, hee dubbed Hussee knight, and him advanced to many preferments, whose family became afterwards Barons of Galtrime." This was in the 14th century, and is, perhaps, sufficient to illustrate the decline of the old Irish nobility, and the rise of the Norman, without increasing the bulk of this sketch or outline, by adducing other examples from the time of the Plantagenets to that of the Tudors.

In the reign of Queen ELIZABETH, Cölla O'Kelly was chief of his name, and represented the Clan na G'Cölla. His residence was Rath-Cöll, or Castle-Kelly, in the province of Connaught. Cölla O'Kelly was a distinguished field-officer in the army of Queen ELIZABETH, and served with the Earl of Clanricarde at the battle of Kinsale. He is also mentioned with much honour in the war in Spain. He was lineal descendant of the last King of Maine. Cölla married one of the Betaghs, a good and ancient family, of Danish extraction, by whom he had,

JOHN, a field-officer in the army of CHARLES I., and distinguished for his fidelity to the house of Stuart. He m. Isma, dau. of Sir Wm. Hill, of Ballybeg, by his first wife, who was dau. of Plunkett of Gypstown, the chief of whose family is the Earl of Fingall. He was restored, by a particular clause in the Act of Settlement, to all the estates which he either had in possession or reversion in the year 1641, which estates were accordingly enjoyed by him and his family. He had two sons,

I. CHARLES, a colonel in the army of CHARLES II., and equally devoted to the cause of this monarch, as the chief that preceded him was to the interests of CHARLES I. He was a gentleman of great abilities and universal knowledge, and in the reign of JAMES II. was chosen knight of the shire for co. Roscommon. He m. O'Kelly of Gallagh's dau., by whom he had,

DOMHNAL, or DENIS. Donald was highly distinguished as a scholar, and equally so as a soldier. After King CHARLES I. had been put to death, and Ireland reduced by Cromwell, Denis raised a regiment of foot at his own expense, consisting of two thousand men, and proceeded to Spain, and then to France, with this force, to assist the cause of CHARLES II. He m. the Hon. Mary Bellew, eldest dau. of Walter, Lord Bellew, and Frances-Arabella Wentworth, eldest dau. of the Right Hon. Sir W. Wentworth, and sister to the Earl of Strafford.

II. JOHN, of Clonlyon, ancestor of the KELLYS OF CASTLE KELLY.

O'KELLY OF SCREEN.

KELLY, DENIS-HENRY, Esq. of Castle Kelly, co. Roscommon, b. 8 Aug. 1797; m. 1st, Mary, dau. of W.-M. Moseley, Esq. of the Mere, co. Stafford, and Buildwas, co. Salop, and has by her two daus., Leonora-Mary and Mary-Frances. He m. 2ndly, Elizabeth-Diana, dau. of John Cator, Esq. of Beckenham, co. Kent, and Woodbastwick, co. Norfolk, and by her has three daus., Elizabeth, Charlotte, and Lucy-Anne. Mr. Kelly is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of the cos. of Galway and Roscommon, for the former of which he served as high-sheriff in 1819-20, and for the latter, the year ensuing.

Lineage.

CELLACH, chief of Hy-Many, and fourteenth in descent from MAINE MOR, was the progenitor from whom the O'Kellys derived their surname. He was father of AEDH, of whom no mention occurs in the Irish Annals, and it does not appear that he was ever chief of Hy-Many. His son, MURCHADH, is the first who could have taken the name of O'CELLAIGH, or O'KELLY, as being the O(nepos or grandson) of Cellach. He seems to have succeeded Murchadhan, the son of Sochlachan, in the chieftainship, and to have d. in 960. Murchadh was s. by his son, TADHG MOR O'KELLY, chief of Hy-Many, for thirteen years, who fell at Clontarf, fighting under the banner of Brian Borumha, A.D. 1014. Tradition relates, that the O'Kelly crest of "the Enfield" originated at this time, from the circumstance of this animal having issued from the sea, to protect the body of Tadhg from the Danes, 'till rescued by his followers. This warlike chieftain left, with other issue, a son and heir, CONCHOBHAR, or CONOR O'KELLY, chief of Hy-Many, who was slain in 1030. He was father of CONCHOBHAR O'KELLY, whose son, TADHG O'KELLY, mentioned in the annals of the Four Masters, at the year 1074, was s. by his son, DIARMAID O'KELLY, who is stated to have been Prince of Hy-Many for sixty years, but as no notice of him occurs in the authentic annals, this can scarcely be true. Diarmaid, was father of CONCHOBHAR MOENMAIGHE O'KELLY, stated to have been Prince, or arch-chief of Hy-Many, for forty years. According to the Annals of the Four Masters, he built O'Kelly's Church, at Clonmacnoise, in the year 1167, and was slain by Conor Moenmoy O'Conor, the son of King RODERIC, in 1180, together with his son, TADHG TAILLTENNA. This latter was father of

DOMHNALL MOR O'KELLY, chief of Hy-Many, whose death is recorded by the Irish Annals to have taken place in 1224. He m. Duvcola, dau. of Domhnall Mor O'Brien, King of Munster, and had issue, I. CONCHOBHAR, of whom presently; II. Tadhg-Finn, of Magh Ruscach, living in 1268; III. Eoghan, from whom derived the sept of Clannmaicne, who gave their name to the barony of Clonmacnorven, in the east of co. Galway; IV. Thomas, Bishop of Clonfert, d. in 1263; V. Lochlainn; VI. Diarmaid, ancestor of the family of Mac Eochadha, or KEOGH. The eldest son,

CONCHOBHAR O'KELLY, chief of Hy-Many for twenty-one years, m. 1st, the dau. of O'Heyne, by whom he had two sons,

I. Domhnall, chief of Hy-Many, who resigned that dignity to his brother Maine, and retired into the Monastery of Knockmoy, where he d. in 1295. He had five sons, GILBERT, David, Tadhg, chief of Hy-Many, slain at the battle of Athenry, in 1316; Conchobhar, chief of Hy-Many, slain in Fassa Coille, in 1318; and Aedhor Hugh. The son,

GILBERT O'KELLY, chief of Hy-Many, was ancestor of the senior line of the family, the O'KELLYS OF BELAGALLDA.

II. Murchadh, or Morogh.

Conchobhar's second wife was Deibhail, dau. of O'Louglin Burren, and by her he was father of DONNCHADH MUIMHNEACH, ancestor of all the subsequent chiefs, and Maine, chief of Hy-Many. He m. 3rdly, Edavin, dau. of Macnamara, and by her had Cathal na Finne, Caibre, and Maurice. The son of the second marriage,

DONNCHADH MUIMHNEACH, or DONOGH, the MOMONIAN O'KELLY, s. his half-brother, and was chief of Hy-Many. He m., according to the books of Lecan, two wives: by the first, Rose, dau. of M'Quillin, of the Rout, he had four sons, Muircheartach, Aedh, Macleachlain, and Maine; and by the second, Duibhesa, dau. of O'Conor, he had Tadhg, and Conchobhar, who both d. s. p.; EDMOND, ancestor of the family of M'Edmond, of Gaille; WILLIAM BOY; and Domhnall Muimhneach. Donogh d. in 1307. His eighth son,

WILLIAM BOY O'KELLY, although younger than his brothers, obtained for himself and his posterity the chief sway in Hy-Many, and may justly be looked upon as the patriarch of the O'Kellys. He received much opposition from his relative, Tadhg, son of the famed Tadhg, who fell at Athenry, but, despite of the aid the O'Conors gave to his opponent, he established his claim in 1340. William Boy O'Kelly is celebrated by the Irish bards as a prince of unbounded munificence, and the annals of Clonmacnoise record a grand entertainment he gave, in 1351, to "the poetts, brehons, bardes, harpers, gamesters, jesters, and others of their kind, during the Christmas holidays, at his house of Gaille. He built the castle of Callow, and founded the magnificent abbey of Kilconnell. He d. in 1381, leaving a son,

MAELEACHLAINN O'KELLY, in whose favour his father had resigned, six years previously, the chieftainship of Hy-Many. He m. two wives, (but it is much disputed which was the first,) one was Finola, dau. of O'Conor Don; the other, dau. of Walter Burke. Certain it is, that by the latter he had Ruaidhri, who d. s. p., BRIAN, and Conchobar; and by the former, Aedh, Feradhach, Tadgh, DONNCHADH, ancestor of the O'KELLYS OF O'MULLAGHMORE, and GALLAGH, (see next article,) Domhnall, who d. in 1393; WILLIAM, ancestor of the O'Kellys of Aughrim and Callow; and Edmond, who d. s. p. in 1393. Macleachlainn d. in 1401. His son,

BRIAN O'KELLY, Tanist of Hy-Many, m. Edavin, dau. of Cathal O'Conor, King of Connaught, and had issue,

I. AEDH, or HUGH, chief of Hy-Many, who d. in 1467, and was interred at Athlone. He m. 1st, a dau. of M'Dermot of Moylurg, and had by her two sons,

1. WILLIAM, of Athleague, chief of Hy-Many, who was slain by his own relatives in 1487. He had three sons, viz., TADHG, Brian, who slew his brother, Tadhg, in 1484, and was himself hanged by the O'Kellys for the crime; and MACLEACHLAINN, who was engaged in much contention with the O'Conors. He was ancestor of the O'KELLYS OF ATHLEAGUE, who are now represented by DANIEL KELLY, of Cargins, Esq. Of this family was the late Thomas Kelly, Judge of the Court of Common Pleas in Ireland, whose son is the present Rev. Thomas Kelly.

2. DONNCHADH, of Lecan, ancestor of O'KELLY of Lecan, Turrick, and Liscor.

Aedh m. 2ndly, Benmumhan Ny-Conor, and by her, who d. in 1468, had two sons, viz.,

1. MACLEACHLAINN, chief of Hy-Many.

2. EDMOND, chief of Hy-Many, whose grandson AEDH O'KELLY, of Lisdalon, was the last chief of Hy-Many. O'Ferrell brings down a branch of the Lisdalon family to HUBERT OGE KELLY, son of Hubert Kelly, by a dau. of W. Harbour, of Dublin.

II. MAGHNUS, or MANUS, of whose descendants, the O'KELLYS OF SCREEN, we are about to treat.

Brian d. in 1393. His second son,

MAGHNUS, or MANUS O'KELLY, had, according to the pedigree of O'Kelly, drawn up by Charles O'Conor, of Belanagare, the Manor of Athlone, co. Roscommon, for his appanage. He m. Celia, dau. of Myles Burke, of Shruile, and was father of Domhnall, or Daniel O'Kelly, lord of the manor of Screen, who m. Catherine, dau. of Ulick Burke, the Mac William of Clanrickarde, and left a son and successor,

Donnchadh, or Denis O'Kelly, lord of the manor of Screen, who m. the dau. of Turlogh O'Conor Don, and was s. by his son,

Aedh, or Hugh O'Kelly, lord of the manor of Screen, to whom the freedom of England was granted by Philip and Mary, by patent, dated 1557. He m. and was father of

Teige, or Timothy O'Kelly, of Aughrane, (now Castle Kelly,) lord of the manor of Screen, and high-sheriff of the co. Roscommon in 1566. He m. Catherine, dau. of Hugh O'Kelly, of Lecan, (or, by other authorities, Finola, dau. of O'Kelly of Belanamore,) and had a son and successor, Ruaidhri, Rory, or Roger O'Kelly, of Aughrane, lord of the manor of Screen, and high-sheriff of the co. Roscommon in 1590. He m. Eliza, dau. of O'Kelly of Belanamore, or, according to another authority, the dau. of M'Edmond of Gaillé, and had two sons, I. William Reagh O'Kelly, who m. Ellen O'Horan, by whom he left two sons, Conor and Dominic, both of whom entered into holy orders, and d. s. p.; and II.

OLIPHANT OF GASK.

OLIPHANT, JAMES-BLAIR, Esq. of Gask, co. Perth, s. his brother, Laurence, 31 Dec. 1824, and is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Perthshire. He m. in 1840, Henrietta, eldest dau. and heiress of James-Gillespie Graham, Esq. of Orchill, co. Perth. Mr. Oliphant was, on the 18th Aug. 1839, served heir male of Francis, tenth and last Lord Oliphant, and heir male of the body of William Oliphant, of Newton, brother of Laurence, third Lord Oliphant.

Lineage.

The Oliphants of Gask have long been recognised as representing, in the male line, the ancient and ennobled house of Oliphant; and it may be remarked as a singular circumstance, that, beside their male descent, now about to be traced, they are also by two marriages heirs-general to the last acknowledged Lord Oliphant, and to the principal branch of the family, derived from William, of Berriedale, second son of the first lord.

Referring to Chalmers' Caledonia, and the Peerages of Scotland, for the earlier pedigree, it is only necessary to mention, that the sixth in descent from Sir William Oliphant, of Aberdalgie, the knightly warrior who so gallantly defended Stirling Castle against EDWARD I. in 1304, and whose tombstone is still extant, recording his death on the 5th Feb. 1329, was

LAURENCE OLIPHANT, a minor in 1450, who was created BARON OLIPHANT, before 1456, when he got a seisin of Auchterhouse, and was designed a noble and worshipful man, Laurence, Lord Oliphant, and Aberdalgie. He obtained bonds of manrent from thirteen gentlemen in his neighbourhood, binding themselves to be his followers. He d. soon after 1495, leaving two sons, namely,

JOHN, his heir.
William of Berriedale, who m. Christian, only dau. and heiress of Alexander Sutherland, of Duffus, in Moray, Strabrok, in Linlithgow, and Berriedale, in Caithness. As the connexion with the latter county is important to the history of this family, it may be remarked that Christian, besides representing a branch of the Earls of Sutherland, and the Morays, Cheynes, and Chisholms, of Moray, was co-heir to the earldom of Caithness, of which she inherited a fourth part. Their son Andrew was so harassed in that district, where he was looked on as an intruder, that, at length, having no son by Dame Janet Sinclair, his wife, he gave up his estates to his chief, in 1520, on condition that Lord Oliphant should provide suitable matches and tochers (fortunes) for his daus. He accordingly married two of the three to cousins of his and their own, probably at a small expense: the ladies were,

Margaret, m. to WILLIAM OLIPHANT, of Newton.
Katherine, m. to Andrew Oliphant, of Binzian.
Helen.

The eldest son,

JOHN, second LORD OLIPHANT, was served heir in 1500. He had been m. by his father, to Elizabeth, dau. of Colin, first Earl of Argyll; and her brother Archibald, second earl, settled lands upon them by indenture, 10 Oct. 1493, a few months after he s. his father. His lordship d. in 1516, leaving his wife surviving. His eldest son,

COLIN, MASTER OF OLIPHANT, never succeeded, having been slain at Flodden in 1513. He had a grant of lands to himself and Elizabeth Keith, his spouse, 1 March, 1504-5. By that lady, who survived him, and m. William, Lord Sinclair, the Master left two sons, viz.,

I. LAURENCE, third Lord Oliphant, then a minor, who is designed son and heir of umquhill Colin, Master of Oliphant, and grandson and heir of the said umquhill John, Lord Oliphant, 18 Nov. 1516, when a gift of the ward of his lands passed. From him descended the succeeding lords down to 1748. The third lord purchased his cousin's whole estate in Caithness, of which he had a charter, 30 March, 1526, and another, 28 Jan. 1552-3, when the non-entry duties for 120 years amounted to £7000. He d. at Aldwick, in Caithness, 26 March, 1566, leaving LAURENCE, fourth Lord Oliphant, whose eldest son, Laurence, dying before him, left one son, LAURENCE, fifth lord, heir to his grandfather in 1593, father of an only child, ANNE, whose claim to the peerage was compromised by giving her husband the title of Mordington, while that of Oliphant was confirmed to her father's cousin-german, Patrick, grandson of the fourth lord by his only younger son, John. PATRICK, who thus became sixth lord, had, by his first wife, an only child, m. to SIR LAURENCE OLIPHANT, of Gask; and by his second wife, three sons, Charles, seventh lord; William, ninth lord; and Francis, tenth lord, who d. without issue in 1748.
II. WILLIAM, of whose line we have to treat.

The second son,

WILLIAM OLIPHANT, of Newton, in Perthshire, (brother to Laurence, third Lord Oliphant,) is mentioned in a complaint to the Privy Council, 21 Nov. 1587. He m. Margaret Oliphant, dau. and heir of Sir William Oliphant, of Berrydale and Strabrook, and had two sons, LAURENCE and John. The elder son,

LAURENCE OLIPHANT, sometimes styled of Newton, and sometimes of Thrumster, who s. his father, m. Mary, dau. of Andrew Rollo, of Duncrub, ancestor of the Lords Rollo, and had Laurence, his heir; Captain Patrick, John, and William. The eldest son,

LAURENCE OLIPHANT, of Gask, m. in 1606, Lilias, dau. of Patrick Graham, of Inchbraikie, and relict of William Colville, of Condie, and had issue. The eldest son,

SIR LAURENCE OLIPHANT, of Gask, was knighted before 1651. He m. in 1634, Lilias, only child of Patrick, sixth Lord Oliphant, by Elizabeth, his first wife, dau. of Sir Patrick Cheyne, Knt. of Esselmont, and had issue,

I. PATRICK, of whom presently.
II. Laurence, who, in 1659, had the estate settled on him by his father, and was styled younger of Gask. He m. in 1661, Anne, dau. of Sir George Preston, of Valleyfield, and had issue, GEORGE; LAURENCE; WILLIAM; Kate, m. to Hugh Paterson; and Anne. Laurence Oliphant d. before his father, in 1672. His widow m. 2ndly, James Hay, of Pitfour. Laurence's eldest son,

GEORGE OLIPHANT, s. his grandfather. He m. 1st, in 1681, Ann, dau. of Sir John Malcolm, Bart. of Balbedie; and 2ndly, in 1684, Jean, dau. of James, third

Lord Burleigh; but dying in that year, without issue, his only surviving brother,

William Oliphant, became of "Gask," but on his demise, unm., in 1704, it reverted to the right heirs.

III. Andrew. IV. James.
V. David. VI. Archibald.
I. Lilias, m. in 1668, to James Graham, of Orchill.
II. Ann, m. in 1672, to Colin Campbell, of Mongie.
III. Elizabeth, m. to Gavin Drummond, of Belliclone.

Sir Laurence, who made his will, 5 June, 1679, d. on the 20th of the following July. His eldest son,

Patrick Oliphant, of Williamston, incurred by his marriage the displeasure of his father, and was in consequence disinherited. He m. Margaret, dau. of the Rev. John Murray, minister of Trinity, Gask, and sister of another Rev. John Murray, his successor therein. By her he had, I. James; II. Thomas; III. Laurence; I. Anna; II. Lilias, m. in 1694, to Mr. David Shaw, minister at Aberdalgie; and III. Margaret. He d. in 1694, and was s. by his son,

James Oliphant, of Gask, who s. upon the demise of his cousin William, in 1704. He m. 16 July, 1689, Janet, dau. of the Rev. Anthony Murray, of Woodend, from which family sprang the Duchess of Lauderdale, Countess of Dysart. She was co-heir to her brother, Thomas Murray, of Woodend. They had, I. Laurence; II. James; III. Thomas; I. Lilias, m. in 1718, to Laurence Oliphant, of Condie; and II. Catherine, m. to Robert Græme, of Garvock. The eldest son,

Laurence Oliphant, of Gask, b. in 1691, m. the Hon. Amelia-Anne-Sophia Nairne, second dau. of William, second Lord Nairne, brother of John, first Duke of Athol, and had, with two daus., Margaret, m. in 1748, to Patrick Græme, of Inchbraikie; and Janet, m. to William-Drummond Macgregor, of Balhadie, one son and heir,

Laurence Oliphant, of Gask, who m. in 1755, his cousin, Margaret, dau. of Duncan Robertson, of Strowan, by the dau. of Lord Nairne. On the death of her brother, the aged chief of Strowan, his grand-nephew, of Gask, became heir of line of the family, but the feudal predilections of this Scoto-French gentleman in favour of heirs male, induced him to pass over his near relations, and allow a search for any heir male, however distant, in preference. By this lady (who d. 18 March, 1774) he had issue,

I. Laurence, his heir.
II. Charles, who d. s. p., 23 July, 1797.
I. Mary-Anne-Mary, m. to Alexander Stuart, of Bonskeid.
II. Amelia-Anne-Sophia, m. to Charles Stuart, of Dalguise.
III. Caroline, m. to William, fourth Lord Nairne.
IV. Margaret, m. in April, 1811, to Alexander Keith, of Ravelston.

Mr. Oliphant d. 1 Jan. 1792, and was s. by his eldest son,

Laurence Oliphant, of Gask, who m. in 1795, Christian, only child and heir of Dr. Joseph Robertson Blair, of Ardblair, by Rachel, his wife, dau. of James Blair of Ardblair, and had, (with four younger daus., Christian, Harriet, Amelia, and Caroline, all deceased,)

I. Laurence, his heir.
II. James-Blair, present representative.
I. Rachel.
II. Margaret, m. to Thomas Kington, Esq. of Charlton, Bristol, and d. in 1839, leaving issue.

The eldest son,

Laurence Oliphant, of Gask, dying unm. 31 Dec. 1824, was s. by his brother, the present James-Blair Oliphant, of Gask and Ardblair, who is thirteenth in descent from the first lord, and twenty-third from David, who is said to have been godson of King David I. Being heir male of the only brother of the third lord, he appears to be the head of the family, and has a claim to the peerage, which King Charles I., after a celebrated trial in his own presence, adjudged to the heir male, in 1633; while he at the same time conferred a new title with the same precedency on the husband of the heiress, who thus got the style of Lord Mordington, with nearly 200 years' antiquity—a curious instance of one peerage being split into two.

Mr. O'Malley, one of her Majesty's counsel in Ireland, s. his father, the late Charles O'Malley, Esq.

Lineage.

The O'Malleys are among the oldest families in Mayo, and their Prince reigned as Sovereign over a great extent of territory on the western coast of Ireland called Umalia, or the "Oules of O'Malley," (which latter name is not yet quite effaced,) and including the islands lying between Sligo and Galway Bay. They were possessed of great maritime power, and still enjoy a traditionary reputation as the most persevering and successful opponents of the Danes.

It is recorded that Brien Boru waited at Athlone to be joined by O'Malley's forces before he advanced to give battle to the invaders at Clontarf. Tradition also states that the O'Malleys were the founders of the great College of Mayo, where so many of the Princes of Europe are said to have been educated, and where a son of the King of Bohemia is buried; and at a much later period, about the middle of the fifteenth century, they established, according to M'Geoghegan, the Abbey of Murrisk.* In the reign of Queen MARY of England,

LOUGHLIN O'MALLEY, son of Owen O'Malley, was Lord High Admiral of Connaught, and added to his family arms a ship, as an emblem of his office. He d. circa 1580, leaving an infant son,

EDMUND O'MALLEY, b. in 1579, under the guardianship of his aunt, the celebrated GRACE O'MALLEY, or Grana Uile, who seized the supreme power, and maintained herself against the English, defeating the troops sent against her; but, having afterwards formed an alliance with Sir Richard Bingham, and assisted him with her forces, was invited to the court of Queen ELIZABETH. She m. M'William Oughter, and left a son, the first Viscount Bourke, of Mayo, for whom she stripped her nephew of a considerable portion of his territory. Edmund adhered to the cause of CHARLES I., and d. in exile at Breda, in 1651, leaving a son and successor,

CHARLES O'MALLEY, last prince of the O'Malleys, who was present, when very young, at the battle of Worcester, and accompanied his father to Breda. At the Restoration, he recovered the barony of Murisk, co. Mayo, (forming but a very small portion of the territory belonging to his family previous to the Civil War,) and received from CHARLES II. a patent for the same. He attended JAMES II. through all his Irish campaigns, and d. with him in exile at St. Germains, in 1692, having refused to come in under the capitulation of Limerick.† He m. at the court of Spain, the dau. of Sir Christopher Garvey, maid of honour to the queen, and was s. by his only son,

* It is stated that about the year 1000, a second son of the then Prince of the O'Malleys, after finishing his studies at the College of Mayo, went to travel, and passing through France, was so well received at the court of that kingdom, that he settled there and founded the noble family of De Maillé in that country.

† Charles O'Malley had five brothers, all of whom went abroad with him. One joined the French army and died soon after. The rest proceeded to the frontiers of Hungary to fight against the Turks then at war with the emperor. Of these one only was ever heard of after; he rose to be a General Officer and Count of the Empire.

Lineage.

Nial the Great, called Nial of the Nine Hostages, monarch of Ireland in the latter part of the fourth century, had eight sons; the four elder were princes in Ulster, and were called, from their great ancestor, the Northern Hii Nials; the four younger were chieftains in Leinster, and were called the Southern Hii Nials. From the time of Nial to the accession of Brian the Great, in 1002, the throne of Ireland was exclusively possessed by the descendants of Nial. Ergan, his eldest son, was progenitor of the house of O'Neill, so distinguished in the history of Ireland, which continued in enjoyment of the principality of Ulster until the reign of James I. Henry VIII. induced Conn, the then prince, to surrender his name of O'Neill, and created him, in lieu thereof, Earl of Tyrone. His grandson, Hugh, resumed that princely title, and, as the O'Neill, carried on a successful war against the English crown during the entire reign of Queen Elizabeth. The principal line of this branch of the Niall family became extinct in the time of Charles I. Connel, the second son of Niall the Great, was ancestor of the O'Donnells, who were, under the O'Neills, chieftains of Tyrconnel, until James I. made Rorie, the then chieftain, Earl of Tyrconnel. He was afterwards attainted, and fled to Spain, where he was created Condé of Tyrconnel, by Philip III. He and his descendants enjoyed the highest rank in that kingdom until the family became extinct, about the year 1693. Fiacha, the fifth son of Nial the Great, was ancestor of the M'Geoghegans, who were heads of the Southern Hii Nials, and chieftains of Moycashell, or Kinelfea, a district comprising the western part of the county of Westmeath, together with the lands from Durrow, in the Queen's County, to the Hill of Wisheagh, as well as those on which stand the towns of Mullingar, Moate, Tyrrel's Pass, &c., as detailed in a work in the Lambeth Library, entitled, "Extent of the M'Geoghegan country in the time of Queen Elizabeth." Geraldus Cambrensis states, that the M'Geoghegans were princes of Moycashell on the invasion of the English in the time of Henry II. Their vicinity to the pale brought them into constant collision with the English authorities in Ireland, and they are frequently proclaimed as the king's Irish enemies, and frequently summoned to his assistance as his friends. The M'Geoghegans are included in most of the royal writs for military aid, or of obedience to officers; and in that of 9th Edward III., the then M'Geoghegan is ranked amongst the chief of the Irish who were requested to join the king in an expedition against Scotland. O'Neill of Ulster, O'Conor of Connaught, O'Malaghlan of Meath, and eight other native princes, are named with M'Geoghegan in this writ. In the time of Henry VIII.,

Rosse M'Geoghegan, the then M'Geoghegan, and chieftain of Kinelfea, or Moycashell, entered into a treaty with Lord Leonard Grey, Viscount Graney, the king's deputy in Ireland, by which, as chieftain of his nation and territory, he agreed to bear allegiance to the king of England, to serve him against all his enemies, and to aid him with certain forces when called upon. This treaty bears date 28 Nov., 29th Henry VIII. Rosse was s. by his son,

Connor, the M'Geoghegan and chieftain of Moycashell. He had two legitimate sons,

I. Conlagh, his successor.
II. Hugh, who became heir to his brother.
And an illegitimate son, called, Rosse M'Geoghegan.

On the death of Connor, the territory was divided; Conlagh s. to Moycashell, and Hugh obtained Castletown. Conlagh had no issue, and surrendered his estates to Queen Elizabeth, on condition that she would re-grant them, with a limitation, in default of male issue to himself, to his nephew, Niel, the son of the illegitimate Rosse. This re-grant passed, and

Hugh was thereby deprived of his inheritance. On the death of his brother, however, he became chief of his nation, and head of his branch of the family of Nial the Great. He m. Ellinor, dau. of Walter Tirrel, of Clunmeagh, in Westmeath, and dying 10 June, 1622, left issue by her, besides other children,

Arthur, his successor, the last who held the title of M'Geoghegan, chieftain of the name and race. During the Civil War he rendered himself conspicuous for his zeal and fidelity in the cause of Charles I., for which, on the reduction of Ireland by Cromwell, he was deprived of all his territories, the inheritance of his ancestors for so many centuries, which were granted to adventurers of the Cromwellian party, to whom they were confirmed on the Restoration. His wife, during the war, sheltered from the pursuit of her own people some soldiers of Cromwell's army, who had been defeated in an engagement with her husband's troops, and, in gratitude for this service, a grant was made to her of the Bunowen estate, in the co. Galway, which had been taken from the O'Flaherties, who were slain; and thus were the M'Geoghegans transplanted from Westmeath into Connaught. Arthur m. Julia, called in Irish, Giles, dau. of James M'Coghlan, of the Hill, in the King's County, Esq., by whom he had,

I. Hugh, who d. during the war, leaving a son, Edward, who d. s. p.
II. Edward, to whom, and to the heirs male of whose body, the Bunowen estate was limited, upon the death of Julia.

Arthur was killed in battle, and was s. by his son,

Edward Geoghegan, Esq. of Bunowen, who m. Margaret, dau. of James Dillon, Esq. of Ballymoloy, in Westmeath, second son of General Count Dillon, by whom he had,

Charles Geoghegan, Esq. of Bunowen Castle, who, by Mary, dau. of Valentine Blake, Esq. of Drum Castle, in the co. Galway, had a son,

Edward Geoghegan, Esq. of Bunowen, who intermarried with Cecilia, dau. of Richard Blake, Esq. of Ardfry, co. Galway. Mr. Blake was descended from Richard Blake, speaker of the Supreme Council of Kilkenny from 1642 to 1651, and, by his son, was grandfather of Joseph, first Lord Wallscourt, and by his dau., of the Countesses of Kerry and Louth, and the Viscountess Kingsland. Edward Geoghegan d. 9 Sept. 1765, leaving issue,

Richard Geoghegan, Esq. of Bunowen, a gentleman celebrated for his literary attainments, and as the first person who devoted himself to the reclamation of the waste lands in the remote districts of Connemarra, into which he made the first road, thirty miles in length. Mr. Geoghegan m. Mary-Anne, dau. of John Bodkin, Esq. of Anna, co. Galway, and had,

I. John David, his successor.
II. Connolly, an officer in foreign service, who d. s. p. This is the gentleman so favourably mentioned by Monsieur Dutemps, in his celebrated "Memoirs d'un Voyageur qui se repose," vol. ii. He is there spoken of as the intimate friend of the illustrious Comte Alfieri, and his assistant in extricating the Comtesse Albani from the alleged tyranny of her husband the Comte Albani, the last member of the royal house of Stewart, except his uncle, Cardinal Yorke.

Richard d. in July, 1800, and was s. by his son,

John-David Geoghegan, Esq. of Bunowen Castle, b. 4 Dec. 1758. Mr. Geoghegan was member in the Irish Parliament until 1798, and was delegate for the Volunteers of the whole province of Connaught, as stated in Grattan's Memoirs. From the time of the extinction of the senior branch of the O'Neills, in the reign of Chas. I., it had been the anxious desire of the successive representatives of the M'Geoghegan family, as the undoubted heads of the Southern Hii Nials, and the descendants of Fiacha, son of the great Niall, to assume the family name of O'Neill; but the attainders and forfeitures against them, and the persecutions which they, in common with the greater portion of the ancient nobility of Ireland, suffered for so many generations, rendered any attempt to effect their desire as fruitless as it would have been dangerous. Times, however, changed: Mr. Geoghegan held a high and confidential office under the crown; he was therefore not debarred from making the application. He accordingly petitioned King GEORGE III.; and his majesty being satisfied, as he states in his privy-seal letter, dated at Whitehall, 13 Feb. 1808, and published in the government Gazette, that Mr. Geoghegan was paternally descended from Nial, of the nine hostages, monarch of Ireland, granted him his royal licence and authority to take and use the surname of O'Neill. Mr. Geoghegan, who thus became O'Neill, m. Gertrude, dau. and co-heir of Robert Fetherstone, Esq. of White Rock House, co. Longford, cousin of Sir Thomas Fetherstone, M.P. for that county, and had surviving issue,

I. JOHN-AUGUSTUS, his heir.
II. Charles-Fetherstone, b. Dec. 1804.
I. Gertrude, m. to Thomas-Fleetwood Walker, Esq. of Elm Hall, in the co. Kildare, by whom she had one son and one dau., deceased.

Mr. O'Neill d. 8 April, 1830, and was s. by his elder son, JOHN-AUGUSTUS O'NEILL, Esq., now of Bunowen.

Mr. O'Reilly, who s. his father, the late Dowell O'Reilly, Esq., 13 Nov. 1808, is lineal descendant, in the elder branch, of Edmond O'Reilly, of Kilnacrott Castle, co. Cavan, the last Tanist of the sept of O'Reilly, Princes of East Brefny, comprising the county of Cavan, and parts of Westmeath and Leitrim. He is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Queen's Co.

Lineage.

Ragallagh (the son of Cathalan, Prince of Brefny, and grandson of Dubh Cron, a leading chief against the Danes, who was eldest son of Maolmordha, Dynast of East Brefny, lineally descended from Brian, the fourth Milesian King of Connaught) s. his father in the government of Muintir Maolmordha, A.D. 981, and commanded the royal army during the reign of Maolseachluin until the dethronement of that prince, in 1002, in favour of Brian Boroimh, from which period Raghallach accompanied that celebrated chief in all his expeditions, and at length fell with him at the battle of Clontarf. Ragallagh's son and successor,

Arten, Prince of East Brefny, was father of Targaille, Prince of East Brefny, who was the first that assumed the name of Ua Ragallagh, or O'Reilly. From this time, too, the principality of East Brefny went by the appellation of Brefny O'Reilly, and that of West Brefny by that of Brefny O'Ruarc, until both were converted into shire ground, called counties, by Queen Elizabeth, under the government of Thomas, Earl of Sussex, A.D. 1562, at which time the eastern division was called the county of Cavan, and the western the county of Leitrim. He was s. by his son,

Cu-Chonacht, or Constantine O'Reilly, who d. in 1089, leaving a son and heir,

Mac-na-haighe, or Nicholas O'Reilly, who governed the principality of Brefny O'Reilly for thirty-eight years. He was killed by Tiernan O'Rouarc, in 1127, and was s. by his elder son,

Donald O'Reilly, Prince of Brefny, who was killed by the people of Gallmga, in East Meath, in 1157, and leaving no issue, was s. by his brother,

Godfrey O'Reilly, Prince of Brefny, who was slain, together with his eldest son, Gelasius, in 1161, by Malachy O'Ruarc, Dynast of Brefny O'Ruarc, who aimed at the sovereignty of the entire Hy Briuin Breifny. He was s. by his second son,

Cathal, or Charles O'Reilly, Prince of Brefny, who had three sons: Feargall, the eldest, was slain in the lifetime of his father, in 1184; Andach, who succeeded; and Donall, whose son Andach was killed, with his cousin, at the battle of Moysleachta, in 1256. The second son and successor,

Andach O'Reilly, Prince of Brefny, m. Winifred, dau. of Morough O'Flaherty, Dynast of West Connaught, and had three sons, I. Cathal, or Charles, his heir; II. Cuconacht, styled in the annals, Lord of the territory of Dartree and Clan Fermoy, co. Monaghan, was killed at the battle of Moy Sleachta, in 1256; III. Feargal. The eldest son and heir, Cathal, or Charles O'Reilly, Prince of Brefny, opposed William de Lacy in his invasion of Brefny, and defeated him, with great slaughter, in 1233. In 1237, Cathal founded a monastery of canons regular in Trinity Island, on Loch Uchter; and, in 1244, is especially addressed as King of Brefny, (V. claus. rot. mebr. 7ª 28 Hen. III.) among the chieftains to whom Hen. III. then wrote circulatory letters, for aid against the Scotch. He m. the dau. of Mortagh McDermot, of Moylurg, and had three sons, I. Donall-Ruagh, killed, with his father and next brother, at the battle of Moysleachta, in 1256, leaving, by Honora MacCostello, his wife, three sons, Matha, Feargal, and Giolla-Josa-Ruadh, successive Princes of Brefny; II. Niall-Coach, slain with his elder father and brother; III. Conn. The last,

Conn O'Reilly, s. his father in the government of Brefny, and dying in 1257, was s. by his nephew,

Matha, or Mathew O'Reilly, Prince of Brefny, who d. in 1282, and was s. by his next brother,

Feargal O'Reilly, Prince of Brefny, who, at his decease in 1293, was s. by his brother,

Giolla-Josa, or (Gelasius) Ruadh O'Reilly, Prince of Brefny, who extended his dominion over all the country, from Drogheda to Ratherohan, co. Roscommon, and in 1300 he built and endowed for the friars the Monastery of Cavan, in which he erected a magnificent chapel, and a mausoleum for himself and his family. He m. Penelope, dau. of Niall-Burdhe O'Niall, Dynast of Tor Egan, and by her had several sons.* The eldest,

CUCONACHT O'REILLY, Prince of Brefny, after holding the sovereignty for sixteen years, retired to the Monastery of Cavan, when he took the habit of St. Francis, and d. in 1369. He had resigned the principality to his next brother,

PHILIP O'REILLY, Prince of Brefny, who was rebelled against and taken prisoner by his younger brothers, who set up Manus, his nephew, in his stead, whereupon a great confusion arose in Brefny. Eventually, however, after the battle of Blencuppa, Philip was restored to his principality. He m. Catharine, dau. of Cormac-O'Farrell Rurdhe, Dynast of Annally, and dying in 1384, left a son,

JOHN O'REILLY, Prince of East Brefny, who d. in 1402, and was s. by his eldest son,

OWEN (or EOGAN NA FEASOIGNE) O'REILLY, Prince of Brefny, who m. Gormley, dau. of Tiernan-Mor O'Ruarc, Dynast of West Brefny, and had, with other issue, an eldest son,

CATHAL, or CHARLES O'REILLY, Prince of Brefny, who m. Joan, dau. of McMahon, Dynast of Monaghan, by whom he had three sons. He d. about 1467. His eldest son,

JOHN O'REILLY, Prince of Brefny, was engaged in a lengthened warfare with Aodh-Oge, the son of Aodh-Ruadh Macmahon, for the maintenance of his inheritance. He m. Catherine, dau. of Conn, son of Dowel O'Neill, Prince of Tyrone, and was s. by his eldest son,

FERGAL O'REILLY, Prince of Brefny, who d. in 1536, when his next brother,

MAOLMORDHA, or MYLES O'REILLY, was declared Sovereign Prince of East Brefny. He m. Margery, dau. of Hugh-Dubh O'Donnell, Dynast of Tirconnell, and dying in 1565, had issue,

I. AODH, or HUGH, his heir.
II. Donald, killed in a skirmish soon after his father.
III. EDMOND, of whom hereafter as Tanist.
IV. Johnn, V. Eogan, VI. Cathain, } All three suffered much for their hostility to the English.
VII. Philip, styled the Prior.

O'Reilly, following the example of O'Neill, O'Donnell, and all the neighbouring princes, repaired to Dublin, made his submission to the Lord-Deputy, St. Leger, and took an oath of allegiance to HENRY VIII.; despite which, however, we find him engaged, in 1552, in hostilities against the Lord-Lieut. Sir James Crofts, who had imprisoned O'Neill. Subsequently, a feud arose between the O'Neills and the O'Reillys, which led to much bloodshed, and the overthrow of O'Neill's army. O'Reilly was s. by his eldest son,

AODH, or HUGH O'REILLY, Prince of Brefny, surnamed Connell, from his being fostered and educated in Tirconnell, his mother's country, under the care of her father, Aodh-Dubh O'Donell. He and his brother, Edmund, of Kilnacrott, (who was elected Tanist,) seeing the weakness of the Irish chiefs, through the feuds and dissensions amongst themselves, thought expedient to temporise with the English government, and accordingly repaired, in Nov. 1567, to Sir Henry Sydney, then Lord-Deputy of Ireland, and entered into certain articles of agreement with him on the part of Queen ELIZABETH. The Prince m. thrice: 1st, the dau. of Betagh, Lord of Moynalty, co. Meath, by whom he had three sons, I. JOHN-RUADH (Sir), of whom presently; II. Philip, Prince of Brefny, slain in 1596,—(his son Miles was father of Edmond, whose son Miles was one of the most experienced and distinguished officers during the war of 1641; after the reduction of his country, in 1652, he accompanied his cousin, Philip O'Reilly, to Spain, and was there raised, by his Catholic Majesty, to the rank of Marechal de Camp; he died universally regretted, in 1670;)—and III. Eogan, elected Prince of Brefny at the decease of Edmond of Kilnacrott, in 1601, and d. in 1603. Hugh O'Reilly m. 2ndly, Mary, dau. of Sir Thomas Nugent, Knt. of Carlanstown, co. Westmeath, ancestor of the late Earl Nugent, and second son of Richard, second Baron Delvin, and by her had one son, MAOLMORDHA, who s. his half-brother, Eogan, as Prince of Brefny, and held the government until the plantation of Ulster, in 1609. He m. 3rdly, Isabella Barnaval. O'Reilly d. in 1583, when his eldest son,

SIR JOHN O'REILLY, set up for the sovereignty in opposition to his uncle, Edmond, who had been elected Tanist, and consequently heir to the title &c., according to the ancient law of Tanistry. John, finding his party weak, repaired to England to solicit ELIZABETH'S aid, and was kindly received at court, invested with the order of knighthood, and returned with letters from the Queen to the Lord-Deputy and Council of Ireland, instructing them to support him and his claim. By this powerful interest, Edmond the Tanist was set aside for Sir John, who, being then quietly settled in the government of East Brefny, was deputed, along with his uncle Edmond, representative for the co. Cavan in the parliament held in Dublin, in May, 1585, to which all the other chiefs of the kingdom were invited, with a view of bringing them to a due submission to the government and laws of England. In the month of November following, Sir John O'Reilly entered into certain articles of composition and agreement with Sir John Perrott, Lord-Deputy of the Council of Ireland, whereby he consented to surrender the principality of East Brefny to the Queen, on condition of obtaining it again from the Crown in capite by English tenure. This stipulation was acceded, and a deed of feoffment perfected on the last day of Aug. 1590. Sir John m. the dau. of Philip-Oge O'Reilly, Chief Tochtar Tira, and had issue,

MAOLMORDHA, or MYLES, the Beautiful, who opposed his uncle, Edmond O'Reilly, the Tanist, in the succession, but was slain in a contest near the Blackwater, 14 Aug. 1598. He left a son, Miles, who d. s. p. in 1617.

* Mahon, or Mathew, fourth son of Giolla Josa, or Gelasius O'Reilly, Prince of Brefny in 1280, was father of THOMAS O'REILLY, who had two sons, RICHARD MORE, and FARRELL. The younger was direct ancestor of Terence O'Reilly, Esq., who m. Rose, sister of Philip O'Reilly, Esq. of Ballymorice, co. Longford, and had issue. From the elder son, Richard-More O'Reilly, derived a brother and a sister, DANIEL, and Margaret, wife of Lieut.-Col. J. O'Reilly, M.P. for the co. of Cavan. The former, DANIEL O'REILLY, Esq., was father of CATHERINE, who m. JOHN O'REILLY, Esq. of Ballykilchrist, called Shawn Bane, from the fairness of his complexion, and by him (who was interred at Abbeylara, co. II. Catherine, m. to Edward Ryan, Esq. of Ballinakill, co. Kildare.
III. Anne, m. to William M'Evoy, Esq., brother of James M'Evoy, Esq. of Tobertinan, co. Meath.

Hugh, father of two sons, Philip, and Miles. The elder, who raised a brigade of 1200 men, chiefly composed of his own name and family, and served with distinction as lieut.-gen. in the confederate army of the Catholics of Ireland, during the civil wars of 1641, was highly esteemed for his sound judgment, and was appointed, by the Assembly of Kilkenny, lord president of Ulster. After the reduction of Ireland by Cromwell, Hugh O'Reilly retired, with his brigade, into the Spanish service, in the Netherlands, where he died soon after, and was buried in the monastery of St. Dominick, in the city of Louvain. By Rose O'Neill, his wife, he had an only son, Hugh Ruadh O'Reilly, who was slain by the Cromwellians in 1651, leaving, by Margaret, his wife, dau. of Conor O'Brien, Viscount Clare, a son, Hugh, drowned at sea on his voyage to Spain. His cousin and next of kin, Edmond Buidh O'Reilly, (son of Miles, and grandson of Hugh, the son of Sir John O'Reilly,) served in the army of France, whence he accompanied James II. to Ireland in 1688, and was by that monarch appointed governor of the county of Cavan, or East Brefny. During the campaigns that followed, he fought gallantly for his ill-fated prince, and at length, after the capitulation of Limerick, retired with his brigade to France, where he d. in 1693, leaving, by Joan, his wife, dau. of Bryan O'Farrall, Lord of Mote, co. Longford, an only son, Eogan O'Reilly, who m. at St. Germain en Laye, the dau. of Col. Felix O'Neill, and had a son, Edmond O'Reilly, who, at the beginning of the French revolution, was resident in Paris, with the rank of lieut.-col. of Dillon's regt., and Knight of the Royal and Military Order of St. Louis.

At Sir John's decease, which occurred 1 June, 1596, his second brother, Philip, was set up by O'Neill as the O'Reilly, to the prejudice of Edmond O'Reilly, the Tanist, but he did not long enjoy the title, being slain, through mistake, by the O'Reillys, on the 19th of the following November. This event at last made way (despite of the opposition of Maolmordha) for

Edmond O'Reilly, of Kilnacrott, Prince of East Brefny, party with his brother Sir John in the treaty with Lord-Deputy Sydney, in 1567, and in May, 1585, as well as joint representative with him in the Parliament held in Dublin. He m. twice: 1st, a dau. of the noble house of Plunket; and 2ndly, a dau. of that of Nugent, and had several children; from one of whom derives the Scarvagh family. He was killed at the head of his troops, bravely defending the bridge of Fineaugh, or Finea, against the Scots, leaving, by Catherine, his wife, dau. of Charles O'Reilly, Esq. of the co. Leitrim, colonel of infantry during the civil wars, with a younger son, Edmond, an elder son, Cavan in 1689, who raised a regt. of dragoons, at his own expense, for the service of King James II., and assisted at the siege of Londonderry in 1689. He fought at the battles of the Boyne and Aughrim, from whence he retired with the main army to Limerick, and was included in the articles of capitulation of that city, ratified 3 Oct. 1691, whereby he preserved his estate. On his return to Ireland, he sold his estate, in 1765, for the payment of his debts, to his cousin-german, James O'Reilly, son of Thomas O'Reilly, Esq. of Baltrasna. Mr. Orpen s. his father in 1805.

Lineage.

The family of ORPEN, or ERPEN, is of remote antiquity, and is stated to be derived from ERPEN, a French noble of royal descent. The name was originally ERPEN, often pronounced Alpen, and by the ancient historians, who wrote in Latin, called Erpinus, Alpinus, and Albon, and was varied in all the following forms, prior to the settlement in England of that branch of the family from which the present Orpens descend: Erpen, Arpen, Harpin, Erpon, Herpon, and by the French, D'Arpin, D'Harpin, Torpin, Arpinus, Erpinus, Harpinus, Herpon, Albon, and Albin. The name† is composed of two words, "Er," signifying "Dwellers," and "Pen," "the Summit," (CAMDEN'S Britannia.) Under the monarchs of the early French dynasties, many of the family acted a brilliant and distinguished part, but our limits preclude us from reverting to more than one of those ancient warriors, viz., EUDES ERPEN, who appears to have been a man of high character and martial fame. Gilbert Abbas calls him "Vir magnificus," and he is generally known in the old historians by the name of "Herpinus Bituricensis," or Erpen of Bourges. Partaking of the religious enthusiasm of the times, Eudes Erpen sold the Comte of Bourges to PHILIP I., king of France, for 60,000 crowns, and joined the followers of the Cross, who, with Prince Robert, son of WILLIAM the Conqueror, then set out for Palestine. His services in the Holy Land are frequently alluded to in the ancient chroniclers, and Gilbert Abbas mentions that Baldwin (son of Godfrey, of Bouillon) having determined to attack the army of the Saracens, near Ascalon, Count Erpen remonstrated with him, and urged delay until those chiefs who had withdrawn should return, and all the forces be collected. Baldwin having, however, tauntingly replied, "Si timeas fuge Biturigas," Erpen immediately joined in the attack, but the Christian forces were, as he predicted, totally defeated, Baldwin alone escaping to Jerusalem. Count Erpen, together with Stephen Count of Blois, Stephen of Burgundy, Conrad, and the remains of the army, retreated to the town of Ramoth. Here they were besieged by the Saracens, and after some time, the walls being battered down, the city was taken by storm. Count Erpen, and the other leaders, retired into a tower, where they defended themselves, with eminent valour, for three days, until at length, the enemy, having succeeded in effecting a breach, set fire to the tower. Count Erpen and the others sallied out and made immense slaughter among the infidels; so great, indeed, that they fell back, and calling out to Conrad, who particularly distinguished himself, offered terms if he would surrender; he accordingly did so, and Count Erpen, with all the survivors, were made prisoners. Ordericus Vitalis says, that Count Erpen was conveyed a captive to Babylon, (the author of "L'Art de Verifier les Dates," alters it to Bagdad,) and remained there for a considerable time, until some merchants from Constantinople, happening to discover the place of his confinement, he sent a message to Alexius-Augustus, then emperor, entreating him to procure his release, which the emperor having immediately demanded, Erpen was set free, and returned to France. On his way, he visited Pope Paschal II., to consult his holiness as to the course he should in future adopt, broken down as he was by toil and suffering. Ordericus Vitalis gives at full length the pope's speech to him, and mentions that in the sequel the aged warrior, following the pious advice then given, retired to the monastery of Cluny, in Burgundy, and there, having become a monk, continued in the service of God until his death. The son of this redoubted and valiant soldier (by Matilda, his wife, dau. of Gilo, lord of Sully, Seulli, or Sauliers) was ROBERT D'ERPEN, who held a knight's fee of the honour of Pont Audemar. He is stated to have accompanied the CONQUEROR to England, and to have fixed his residence at Erpingham, in the co. Norfolk, (where some of the Erpen family are supposed to have settled so early as the time of EDWARD the Confessor.) His son was John de Erpingham, in 1100, to whom followed Peter, who was s. by Robert, and he, in 1200, by John, to whom s. in 1277, Robert, who had a brother, Thomas, rector of Henderby, in Suffolk, ancestor probably of the Orpens, of Suffolk, Kent, Essex, and Sussex. Robert d. in 1345, and was s. by his eldest son, John. He must have had another son, named Robert, probably by his second wife, Agnes, for in 1351 (25 EDWARD III.) he was appointed to defend the coast, and in 1359, to raise men in the co. Norfolk.

FRANCIS ORPEN, lived near Farleigh Castle, in Somersetshire. By Agnes Edwards, his wife, he was father of

SIR JOHN ORPEN, Knt., whose son,

ROBERT ORPEN, Esq., m. a lady named Stephenson, one of whose sisters m. O'Donoghue, of Ross, whose ancestors were formerly princes in that part of the co. Kerry which borders on the lakes of Killarney, and another was the wife of M'Carthy More. Thus the Orpens became connected with many of the leading families of Kerry, and this alliance afterwards gave Richard Orpen, of the White House, considerable influence in that county. Rober Orpen came occasionally to visit his brothers-in-law nea Killarney, and had some property there, but never settled in Ireland. His son,

RICHARD ORPEN, Esq., m. Mary, dau. of Henry Ley, Esq. of Teffont Ewyas, Wilts, and sister to Sir James Ley, lord chief justice of the court of King's Bench, (who was created Earl of Marlborough in 1626, see BURKE'S Extinct and Dormant Peerage,) and by her had a son, ROBERT. Richard Orpen, during the unhappy struggles which distracted the reign of the ill-fated CHARLES I., adhered, with desperate fidelity, to the royal cause, had his estate in England confiscated, and at length was killed at the battle of Naseby, in 1646. His son and successor,

ROBERT ORPEN, Esq., b. about the year 1637, appears, by an inquisition dated in 1661, to have resided at a place called Neflaherolin, (sometimes named Killorglin,) in the co. Kerry. He m. Lucy Chichester, and had issue,

I. RICHARD, his heir.
II. Robert, who returned to England, and, it is said, died there.

* Of the family of Maurice Stacke, celebrated for his gallantry in the civil wars of the time of Queen ELIZABETH.

† Froissart spells the name Orpham, or Orphem; and Erpingham is written Orpingham in Speed's Theat. Brit. Thus it became gradually changed into Orphen and Orpen, and this latter orthography has been continued by the family claiming descent from the Erpingham branch, in contradistinction to the rest of the family, who derive from the collateral branches, separated, it is supposed before the establishment of the family at Erpingham or Orpingham.

The eldest son of Robert Orpen,

RICHARD ORPEN, Esq., a capt. in the army, a and magistrate for the county of Kerry, was the first of the family who settled on the river Kenmare. He first resided at Gortkinlinny, or Gortalinny, and soon afterwards at a strong house he had at the head of the river, (about the year 1670,) still known by the name of the White House. This gentleman had a lease for ninety-nine years, renewable for ever, of a great part of the estate of the Hon. H.-S. Petty, afterwards Earl of Shelburne, in the co. Kerry, and he acted as agent to the Dowager Lady Shelburne in superintending the iron mines which were at that period worked there, for which purpose he removed from his father's residence at Killorglin. He also took valuable leases of very large tracts of land, in trust for several of the principal catholic families, about the year 1696, as they could not themselves by law hold such leases. All these trusts were punctually and honourably fulfilled, and the descendants of those families still enjoy a great portion of those lands, though the Orpens lost theirs, as hereafter mentioned. His connexion with the native houses, through the Stephensons, was one reason for their selecting him as their trustee. He m. Isabella, dau. of the Rev. Thomas Palmer, who had been page of honour to Anne Hyde, wife of JAMES II., by whose interest he obtained the government livings in Glenrought, and had issue,

Richard Orpen acquired very considerable property, and, from his activity and determined courage, appears to have taken the lead amongst the protestant settlers in that part of Kerry. In 1688, after the abdication of the English throne by JAMES II., Mr. Orpen garrisoned his house at Killowen, and received into it all the neighbouring protestant families; but Capt. Phelim M'Carthy, with three thousand Irish soldiers, appearing before the gates of the garrison, the besieged, after some time, and when no hope remained of succour, surrendered upon very advantageous terms, which, however, were shamefully violated. After enduring the most severe hardships, Mr. Orpen and his fellow-sufferers at length effected their escape in two vessels which happened to be at hand, and remained in England* until the following year, when he returned to Ireland as a commissary, with the rank of captain in the army of King WILLIAM, and on the 1st of July eminently distinguished himself at the battle of the Boyne. Soon after, he retired with his family to Killowen, and was appointed a magistrate for the co. Kerry about the year 1692.† Mr. Orpen, who had received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, possessed considerable literary attainments, and published some works, his name occurring in Sir James Ware's list of Irish authors. He was s. at his decease by his son, Disliking, however, the country, and wishing to return to France, Mr. Orpen and his wife put all their property on board a small vessel belonging to him, and sailed from Kenmare. A storm, however, overtook them off the Hogg Island, and the vessel went ashore, when the only chance of escape was to venture in the boat; but Mrs. Orpen refusing to do so, her husband would not leave her, and they both perished. It is related that, while the crew were departing from the wrecked vessel, Mr. Orpen said to one of them, named Daniel Sullivan, "Will you desert me too?" The faithful servant returned to the ship and perished with his master and mistress. His widow was allowed a pension for life by the Orpens.

† The family of Newenham is of great antiquity, and claims escent from Ricardus de Newenham, who, in the reign of DWARD II., held the manor of Newenham, in Gloucestershire, d the town of Newenham, in Warwickshire.

Lineage.

The progenitors of this ancient Irish family were formerly joint kings (with the O'Falvys) of Iveragh, and Corcaguinny, in Kerry. The island of Dairbre (now Valencia) was also part of the estate of the O'Shees. ODANUS O'SHEE, chief of his name in the tenth century, is styled in a pedigree, attested in 1582, by Robert Cooke, Clarencieux King of Arms, Lord of the Canthred of Texnane O'Shee, in Kerry, and of the manors of Cloran O'Shee, Clone O'Shee, and Drangan O'Shee, in Tipperary, to which county they seem to have emigrated in the thirteenth century. ODONEUS O'SHEE, chief of his name, (and the tenth in a direct line from the above Odanus,) styled also in the same pedigree Lord of Cramp's Castle, and Sheesland, in Tipperary, obtained, with his three brothers, William, Edmund, and John, letters of denization from Roger Mortimer, Earl of March and Ulster, dated at Clonmel, 6 Nov. 1381, which were confirmed by King HENRY VI. by letters patent, dated at Naas, 18 Nov., 35 HEN. Lineage.

The immediate ancestor of the Owens of Llunllo, from whom the Owens of Tedsmore derive, by maternal inheritance, was Edwin ap Grono, Lord of Tegaingl, in Flint, deducing descent from Howel Dda, or the Good, the celebrated Cambrian legislator, who, on the demise of his father, CADELL, King of South Wales, (second son of RHODRI MAWR, King of Wales,) inherited the kingdom of South Wales, and subsequently usurping the thrones of North Wales and Powys, assumed the title of King of Wales, (See HUGHES OF GWERCLAS.) Howel Dda was s. by his son,

II. GRONO AP OWEN.

The younger son,

GRONO AP OWEN, Lord of Tegaingl, (a district including the greater part of the present county of Flint,) m. Edelfleda, dau. of Edwin, Earl of Mercia and Chester, and widow of the valiant Edmund Ironside, King of the Saxons, and had a son,

EDWIN AP GRONO, Lord of Tegaingl, FOUNDER OF THE XII. NOBLE TRIBE OF NORTH WALES AND POWYS, who, connected both paternally and maternally with the most powerful chieftains of North Wales and Mercia, became one of the principal leaders of his countrymen. The arms assigned to this distinguished Captain, and which are borne, in chief or quartered, by all his descendants, are, "Argent, between four Cornish Choughs, ppr., armed, gules, a Cross-fleury, engrailed, sable," which ensigns English and Welsh writers consider to have been those of his mother, Edelfleda, and of her paternal family, the Earls of Mercia. * During the time that Henry, Earl of Richmond, was secretly laying the foundation of the overthrow of the house of York, he passed concealed from place to place, in order to form an interest among the Welsh, who favoured his cause on account of their respect to his grandfather, Owen Tudor, their countryman. While he was at Mostyn, a party attached to RICHARD III. arrived there to apprehend him. He was then about to dine, but had just time to leap out of a back window, and make his escape through a hole, which to this day is called the king's. Richard ap Howel joined Henry at the battle of Bosworth, and, after the victory, received from the king, in token of gratitude for his preservation, the belt and sword he wore on that day; he also pressed Richard greatly to follow him to court, but he nobly answered, like the Shunamitish woman, "I dwell among mine own people." The sword and belt were preserved at Mostyn until within these few years. Owen, Anne-Warburton,* of Glansevern, co. Montgomery, s. to the estates in 1837, by the bequest of her husband, the late highly-gifted and respected William Owen, Esq., King's Counsel. This lady, only child of the late Thomas Sloughter, Capt. in General Burgoyne's regt., the 16th or Queen's Light Dragoons, and grandniece of Sir Peter Warburton, Bart. of Arley, m. 1st, the Rev. Thos. Coupland, of the Priory, Chester; and 2ndly, in 1823, William Owen, Esq. of Glansevern, King's Counsel.*

Lineage.

This most ancient family is derived by uninterrupted male succession from Rhodri Mawr, King of Powys, of whose descendants an ample account appears under the Lineage of Hughes of Gwerclas, where the early ancestry of the Owens is recorded.

Cadivor ab Dyniawal, Lord of Castel Howel, de-

* This lady is granddaughter of Thomas Sloughter, Esq., high-sheriff for the co. Chester in 1755, and Anne Warburton, his wife, and great-granddaughter of Thomas Warburton, son of Peter, the second Bart. This Thomas Warburton predeceased his father; and his elder brother, George, third Bart., dying without leaving male issue, the baronetcy devolved to his son Peter, who became fourth Bart., and was great-uncle to Mrs. Owen.

Of this Sir George Warburton, the third Bart., and his daughter, there are two large portraits in the hall at Glansevern, by Herman Vander Myn, originals. Sir George of Arly represented the co. Chester in several parliaments, temp. Queen Anne and King George I. He m. the Hon. Diana Allington, dau. of Lord Allington, granddau., maternally, of William Russell, first Duke of Bedford, and sister and co-heir of Giles, third Lord Allington, (refer to Burke's Extinct Peerage.) The other portrait represents Diana, dau. of Sir George Warburton, and wife of Sir Richard Grosvenor, of Eaton, Bart. This Sir Richard acted as grand cup-bearer at the coronation of King George II., by presenting to his majesty the first cup of wine after he had been crowned, and received the cup as his fee. Sir Richard d. in 1732. He was great-uncle to Robert, Earl Grosvenor, created Marquess of Westminster.

* Mr. Owen was educated at the free grammar-school at Warrington, under his uncle, the Rev. Edward Owen, A.M. In the year 1782, he took the degree of A.B. at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was fifth wrangler. Amongst the members of his own college, who graduated at the same time, were Professor Porson, Professor Hailstone, Dr. Raine, (afterwards head-master of the Charter House,) and Dr. Wingfield, (afterwards head-master of Westminster School,) besides several other distinguished persons. Mr. Owen, and the four gentlemen above named, were afterwards chosen fellows of Trinity College. Mr. Owen then became a member of Lincoln's Inn, and was called to the degree of barrister-at-law by that society, of which he was eventually a bencher. After attending the Oxford and Chester circuits for several years, he confined his practice chiefly to the courts of Chancery and Exchequer. He was a commissioner of bankrupts, until he was advanced to the rank of king's counsel. About the year 1821, he quitted the profession of the law, and retired into the country, and acted as magistrate and deputy-lieut., taking an active part in all public business, and generally presiding as chairman of the quarter sessions of the county.

In the abolition of the Welsh judicature, Mr. Owen was instrumental. (See his evidence before the committees of the House of Commons, in the years 1817 and 1820. See also the debates in the House of Commons on this subject, in the year 1820, upon the motion of Mr. Campbell (now Earl Cawdor) for the second committee. Also Mr. Owen's testimony before the law commissioners in 1829, and the report of the same commissioners, who seem to have entirely adopted Mr. Owen's opinion.) The prejudices of the co. Montgomery in favour of the Welsh judicature were such, that the sheriff and grand jury assembled at the great sessions, petitioned for its continuance. To counteract this, Mr. Owen caused a county meeting to be convened, for the purpose of considering the subject: he there, in an able speech, developed and exposed the constitutional defects of the old system. He was heard with great attention, so that all present became persuaded of the propriety of abolition. The consequence was a petition from the county to both houses of parliament: that to the Lords was ordered to be presented by Earl Powis, that to the Commons, by the Right Hon. C.-W.-W. Wynn.

When the great question of parliamentary reform arose, the co. Montgomery was the first to petition in support of it. Mr. Owen proposed and headed the requisition for a county meeting, moved and carried the resolutions on which the petition was founded; and on that occasion he exposed the injustice of that decision of the House of Commons of 1727-8, by which the right of returning a member to parliament was given to the borough of Montgomery only, depriving the contributory boroughs of Llanvyllin, Llanidloes, and Welshpool, of their elective franchise, until the same was restored and extended by the late Reform Act.

rived from TUDWALL GLOFF, fifth son of RHODRI MAWR, King of Wales, lived in the reign of HENRY I. of England, and acquired martial fame in an age in which every man capable of bearing arms was bound to be a soldier. In the second of HENRY II. he took by escalade the Castle of Caerdigan, from the Earl of Clare, and in requital of his valour, is said to have obtained from his sovereign, RHYS AP TEWDWR MAWR, King of South Wales, a new shield of arms, viz., "Sa., three scaling ladders, and between the uppermost a spear-head, arg., its point embrued, on a chief, gu., a tower, triple turretted of the second." Cadivor, by his wife, Katharine, dau. of his prince and kinsman, the "Lord Rees," had, among other children, DAVYDD AB HOWEL VYCHAN, of Corus. The custom of gavelkind, adopted in Wales, had the baneful effect, in many instances, of reducing, one generation after another, extensive patrimonies into petty freeholds.

REES AB DAVYDD, son of Davydd ab Howel Vychan, m. a dau. of Lewelyn ab Howel ab Gwïon, and had a son,

The Prince of Powys knew his value in that age of perpetual warfare, and accordingly stationed him as a guardian of his frontier, on the border of South Wales, by granting him the parish of Llangurig, on the skirts of Plinlimmon. Here he settled, and became the progenitor of many families in the hundred of Arwystli and its vicinity—at Cevn Havod, Dol Bachau, Clochvaen, Creignant, Aberhaves, Glan Dulas, Dol Vachwen, &c. The same prince, as an honorary reward for his faithful services, gave Madog the privilege of bearing a new shield of arms, instead of his paternal coat, from Tudor Trevor, Earl of Hereford, and the adopted founder of the tribe of the Marches of England and Wales, from whom he was descended in the eighth degree. These new arms are described in the sequel. Llewelyn ab Howel's son, by the heiress of Cevn Havod, was

This family derived their descent from LLEWELYN AURDORCHOG, (Leolinus Torquatus,) Lord of Yale in the eleventh century, (see WALCOT OF WALCOT,) who m. Eva, dau. of Bleddyn ab Cynfyn, Prince of Powis. (See Display of Heraldry, by Davies, 1716, p. 64.) Blome, in his Britannia, published in 1673, includes "Edward Evans, of Rhyd y Carw" among the resident gentry of Montgomeryshire. This Edward Evans, by a deed, dated 5 April, 1652, settled an annuity upon Dorothy, his wife, in case she survived him. Providence ordered it otherwise; for on 28 Feb. 1660, he took for his second wife, Frances, dau. of John Pryce, Esq. of Park, in Llanwynnog, by whom he had issue,

* Anne, the wife of Francis Brace, Esq. of Newton, near Leominster, in the co. Hereford, b. in 1719, d. in 1782, descended, maternally, from the Owens of Cevn Havod. She left issue, with several sons and daus., the late Vice-Admiral SIR EDWARD BRACE, K.C.B., who was appointed commander-in-chief at the Nore in 1841, and d. at the Admiralty House, Sheerness, in Dec. 1843.

I. Jane, b. in 1664.
II. Catherine, b. in 1663.
III. Francis, b. in 1665; his mother surviving his birth only one week.

The said Edward Evans, by Dorothy, his wife, had,

I. EDWARD EVANS, (the second,) his heir, m. Martha ——, and had issue,
EDWARD EVANS, (the third.)
Ursula Evans.
Edward Evans (the second) d. in the lifetime of his father, and was buried in Treveglwys Church, 30 Nov. 1687.
II. Morgan Evans, settled upon an estate in Llangurig, and he and Judith, his wife, are parties to deeds bearing date 23 Feb., 26 CHARLES II. (1675.)
III. Richard Evans.
IV. Ursula Evans, devised certain lands to Ursula Evans, her niece, in 1670.

Edward Evans (the first) survived his son ten years; for in the year 1697, he settled Rhyd y Carw estate on his grandson,

EDWARD EVANS, (the third,) father of Sarah Evans, his heiress, who m. in 1725, Charles Davies, Esq., of Llivior, and surviving him, who d. in 1729, she m. 2ndly, John-Pryce Clunne, Esq.

Davies, of Llivior.

The DAVIESES OF LLIVIOR traced their pedigree from BROCHWEL YSGITHROG, Prince of Powis, the opponent of Ethelfrid, King of Northumberland, at the battles of Chester and Bangor, about the commencement of the seventh century. About the nineteenth in descent from Brochwel was MEILIR GRYG, of Tregynon, ancestor of all the Blayneys in Britain and Ireland. (See BURKE'S Peerage and Baronetage, LORD BLAYNEY.) Llewelyn, son of Meilir Gryg, gavelled the main portions of his estates upon his two sons, Einion and Howel. To Einion, the youngest, he gave, according to custom, the paternal seat of Neuadd Gregynog and its appurtenances; and Howel he stationed at "the Vainor in Berriew." Howel was s. at "Vainor" by his son, Phylip Goch, (Rufus,) about the year 1320; another son, Madog Llwyd, was settled at Bryn-Cae-Meisir.

PHYLIP GOCH OF VAINOR'S son, was Madog, father of Gwilym ab Madog, who espoused Marred, dau. of Grufyd ab Meredydd ab Einion, of the line of Cadwgan of Nannau, and had, among other sons,

IEUAN AB GWILYM, who had for wife, Eva, dau. to Howel ab Adda, one of the penaethiaid, or chiefs of Kerry; their son,

DAVYDD AB IEUAN, wedded Gwervyl, dau. of Ievan ab Madog ab Owen. Omitting the two following descents and their respective matches, we come to the great-grandson of Davydd ab Ieuan, who, on account of his stature, was called,

DAVYDD HIR, (ab Gwilym ab Ieuan ab Davydd,) who espoused Gwenllian, dau. of John ab Ievan ab Howel, of Kerry, and was s. by his son,

JOHN AB DAVYDD HIR, of Llivior, who m. Catherine, dau. of Rees Gwynn ab Grufydd ab Howel ab Ievan Blayney. This Ievan was the first who assumed the surname. Blaenau is a pure Welsh word for points, extremities; and is applied to uplands, as Blaenau Gwent, the uplands of Monmouthshire, &c. It is probable that Ievan ab Grufydd ab Llewelyn Vychan, of Tregynon, was put out to nurse at a house called Blaenau, wherever it lies, and thence named Ievan of Blaenau, and since, corruptly, Blayney. The issue of John ab Davydd hir, by Catherine, his wife, above mentioned, were,

I. EDWARD AB JOHN, his heir.
II. Morus ab John, m. Catherine, co-heir to Richard ab Owen ab Gutyn Penwyn.
III. Richard. IV. Thomas. V. Rees.
I. Gwen, m. David ab Grufydd, of Manavon.

EDWARD AB JOHN, of Llivior, eldest son of John ab Davydd hir, led to the altar, Elizabeth, dau. of Davyd ab Morus ab Owen Blayney, Esq. of Aber Bechan. Owen was the eldest son of Ievan Blayney, of Tregynon, having, according to custom, left his younger brother, Grufydd, in possession of the paternal mansion. Edward ab John, by deed, bearing date 20 Jan. 1598, settled part of his landed estate upon his son, DAVID AB EDWARD, upon his marriage to Joyce v^ch^ David, sister to Ieuan ab David ab Howel, Gent. of Trevesgob, in Montgomeryshire.

JOHN AB DAVID, of Llivior, son and heir of David ab Edward, joined with his mother, the said Joyce v^ch^ David, in a deed of family settlement, dated 15 Dec. 1637, and was alive in 1657.

DAVID, son of John ab David, of Llivior, assumed the modern surname of Davies, and, in 1649, m. Bridget, sole dau. and heir of Richard Edwards, of Llivior, son of Richard Edwards, of Llivior, by Blanch, his wife, elder sister of Humphrey Jones, of Garthmyl Hall, who d. s. p. about 1652, leaving a certain sum of money to endow a free school in the parish of Berriew. The heiress of Edwards d. in 1707, having survived her husband seven years, and leaving issue by him three daus., Anne, Joan, and Bridget, and three sons, viz.,

I. John Davies, d. unm. in 1729.
II. Charles Davies, of Llivior, b. in 1665, d. in 1729, having m. (as before related) Sarah Evans, and had issue,
ANNE DAVIES, his heir, b. in 1728, and m. in 1745, Owen Owen, Esq.
III. Arthur Davies, of Ty'n y Coed, d. without issue, in 1758.

Rhyd y Carw and the Tynycoed estates have been in the possession of the present proprietor's maternal ancestors for several centuries, and became attached to the paternal estate of Glyngynwyd by the marriage of Owen Owen with Anne Davies.

The Lower Garthmyl grounds to the South now form part of the Glan Severn domain, being one of the most ancient possessions of the Tynycoed estate; also, the estate of Glan Rhiew, which came into the family at a very remote period.

Mr. Pakington, son of William Russell, Esq. of Powick Court, by Elizabeth, his wife, dau. of Sir Herbert-Perrot Pakington, Bart. of Westwood, assumed his present surname as heir to his uncle, the late Sir John Pakington, Bart.

Lineage.

The antiquity of this family is beyond dispute, for we find, from the foundation of the monastery at Kenilworth, that it flourished in the time of HENRY I., and it appears to have assumed the surname, from one of the Pakingtons in Staffordshire, Warwickshire, or Leicestershire, for in each of those counties we meet with lordships so designated, the proprietors of which wrote themselves, anciently, De Packington.

The founder of the fortunes of the house of Pakington, was

Sir John Pakington, a lawyer, who, in the reign of Henry VIII., was chirographer in the Court of Common Pleas, and d. possessed of large acquired estates. He was eldest son of John Pakington, Esq., grandson of John Pakington, and great-grandson of Robert Pakington, who was living in the reign of Henry IV. Sir John's brother and male heir,

Robert Pakington, Esq., M.P. for the city of London, temp. Henry VIII., was grandfather of

Sir John Pakington, K.B., one of the Privy Council, and an especial favourite of Queen Elizabeth. His son and heir,

Sir John Pakington, of Ailesbury, created a Baronet, 22 June, 1620, m. Frances, dau. of John Ferrers, Knt. of Tamworth, and dying before his father, in Oct. 1624, was s. by his son,

Sir John Pakington, Bart., who s. to the family estates on the death of his grandfather, and resided subsequently at Westwood. He m. Dorothy, one of the daus. of his guardian, Thomas, Lord Coventry, and left at his decease, 13 Jan. 1680, with two daus., the elder m. to Anthony Eyre, Esq. of Rampton, Notts, the younger, to William Godfrey, Esq. of co. Lincoln, an only son and heir,

Sir John Pakington, Bart., M.P. for co. Worcester, temp. Kings Charles II. and James II., who m. Margaret, dau. of Sir John Key, Bart. of Ebrington, co. Gloucester, and dying in 1688, was s. by his only son,

Sir John Pakington, Bart., M.P. for co. Worcester, who d. 13 Aug. 1727, and was s. by his son and heir, (by his second wife, Hester, dau. and sole heir of Sir Herbert Perrot, Knt. of Haroldstone, co. Pembroke,)

Sir Herbert-Perrot Pakington, Bart., M.P. for co. Worcester, the prototype, it is stated, of Addison's inimitable Sir Roger de Coverley. He m. in 1721, Elizabeth, dau. of John Conyers, Esq. of Walthamstow, in Essex, and was s. at his decease, 30 Nov. 1762, by his elder son,

Sir John Pakington, Bart., who dying s. p. 30 Nov. 1762, was s. by his brother,

Sir Herbert-Perrot Pakington, Bart., who m. in 1759, Elizabeth, dau. of Cæsar Hawkins, Esq., and relict of Herbert Wylde, Esq. of Ludlow, co. Salop, and by her, who d. 23 Feb. 1812, had

"These arms," says Guillim, "though some part alluded to the name, are very ancient; and in this church was the following epitaph to Thomas Palmer:—

"Palmers all my faders were,
I, a Palmer, lived here,
And travell'd till, in worn-out age,

"On the blest ascension day,
In the cheerful month of May,
A thousand with four hundred seven,
I took my journey hence to heaven."

He, with the other English settlers, suffered severely in the troubles of 1689, his house, at the Sound of Kilmare, after a spirited defence, in which several of the native Irish were wounded and slain, was burnt to the ground, and but for the earnest supplications, in the Irish tongue, by his second wife, Shelah, dau. of the O'Sullivan More, Mr. Palmer, then an old man, would have been cruelly put to death. Mr. Papillon, a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Kent, s. his father in 1838.

Lineage.

In Dugdale's "Monasticon," we find Toraldus de Papillon one of the witnesses to a deed of confirmation granted by William the Conqueror to the church of Durham.

In the reign of King John,

Ralph Papillon was elected abbot of Westminster. This eminent divine, one of the most eloquent preachers of his time, rose to distinction under the protection of the Abbot Lawrence, by whom, according to Leland, he was appointed Prior of Hurley, a cell of Westminster. He is said to have written a volume of sermons, and another of homilies, on the epistles and gospels, of which Leland speaks in high terms of encomium. He d. in 1225.

William Papillon, one of King Edward the First's most devoted servants, was recommended by his royal master, in the 31st year of his reign, to the abbot and convent of Leicester, for a corrody from that house. This William Papillon is supposed to have founded the family of Papillon of Lubenham,* in Leicestershire. His nephew and heir was Roger Papillon.

Anthony Papillon, the friend of Erasmus, and one of the most distinguished of the Huguenots in France, held an office at the court of Francis I., and enjoyed, in an eminent degree, the favour and protection of the pious Margaret of Valois. He died suddenly in 1525, not without the suspicion of poison,† leaving a son, also a champion of the Reformation, who fell on St. Bartholomew's Day, 1572. He was father of

Thomas Papillon, who was gentleman of the bedchamber to Henry IV. of France, but who left the service of that monarch on his renouncing the protestant faith. He m. 12 Aug. 1572, Jane Veuve de la Pierre, and by her, who was drowned in her passage from France, he had issue,

i. Thomas, b. in 1578, who m. in Paris, and was father of David Papillon, a good and learned man, who suffered much for conscience' sake, and was imprisoned three years at Avranches, in Normandy, on account of his opinions in favour of the reformed religion. A most beautifully written letter by him to his cousin, Thomas Papillon, at London, is still preserved.
ii. David, ancestor of the Papillons of Acrise.

* The old family house near Lubenham still retains the name of "Papillon Hall."

† "Periit Papilio," says Erasmus, "non sine grave suspicione veneni."

Thomas Papillon d. 20 Nov. 1608. His second son,

David Papillon, of Lubenham, obtained a licence, dated 23 May, 1623, from Archbishop Abbot, permitting himself and his family to frequent the church at Merston, co. Northampton, as being nearer than their own parish church of Lubenham, with a proviso, however, that they should once at least in the year (at Easter) attend the latter, to hear prayers and preaching there, and to receive the sacrament. Mr. Papillon published, in 1645, "A Practical Abstract of the Arts of Fortification and Assailing, containing four different methods of fortification, with approved rules to set out in the field all manner of superfices, intrenchments, and approaches by the demicircle, or with lines and stakes, written for the benefit of such as delight in the practice of these noble arts." He was likewise the author of another work, entitled "The Vanity of the Lifes and Passions of Men." He m. 1st, 11 June, 1611, Mary Castel, and by her, who d. 3 May, 1614, had a son, Thomas, who d. in infancy, and a dau., Mary, m. 7 June, 1631, to Peter Fountaine, Esq. He m. 2ndly, 4 July, 1615, Anne-Mary-Calandrini, dau. of Jean Calandrini, whose father and uncle, as well as himself, embraced the reformed religion, and, in consequence, were obliged to leave Lucca, the place of their birth and possessions, and retiring to France, went through many trials and persecutions: they were of a famous Italian family, and lineal relatives of Pope Nicholas V. By this lady, who d. 8 Nov. 1675, David Papillon left at his decease, in 1659, with other issue, a dau., Anne, m. 1st, in 1653, to Sir William Brudenell, of Glaston, co. Rutland; and 2ndly, in 1655, to Everard Fawkner, Esq., and a son,

Thomas Papillon, Esq. of Lubenham, b. 6 Sept. 1623. This gentleman was an eminent merchant of London, and represented that city in parliament in the 10th of William III. He had previously sat for some years (temp. Charles II.) for Dover. He was a strenuous supporter of the patriotic party, by whom King James II. was compelled to abdicate the throne. The Mercers' Company still possess a good portrait of Mr. Papillon. He had purchased, in 1666, the manor of Acrise, in Kent, in which, and his other possessions, he was s. by his son,

Philip Papillon, of Acrise, b. in 1660; M.P. for Dover in the reigns of King William, Queen Anne, and in the beginning of that of George I. He sat afterwards for New Romney. Lineage.

At one period this family of the Parkers resided near Kilkenny.

THOMAS PARKER, Esq., b. in 1618, d. in 1686, leaving three sons, the second of whom,

ROBERT PARKER, Esq., captain in the Royal regiment of foot of Ireland, was born near Kilkenny, in 1666, absconded from his paternal home in 1683, and was engaged in the several military transactions of that eventful period up to 1717. In 1708, Lieut.-General Ingoldsby, the then commander-in-chief in Ireland, applied to the Duke of Marlborough, with whom Captain Parker was serving, to send him over to Ireland to discipline the troops. When this task was accomplished, the government gave him a gratuity of £200, a large sum, when the relative value of money is considered. He m. Elizabeth Tennison, and d. in 1739, leaving (with a dau., Elizabeth, m. in 1727, to Capt. William Tennison, her cousin) one son, THOMAS, who published his father's Memoirs in 1746. This

ROBERT-PARKER DUNSCOMBE, Esq., s. to the Parker property, and dropping the name of Dunscombe, took that of Parker. He was b. 14 Aug. 1766, and m. 20 April, 1788, Helena, eldest dau. of Richard Dunscombe, Esq., by whom he left at his decease, at his seat Inchigagin, 28 July, 1815, (with three daus., Jane, m. 16 April, 1814, to Charles Wilkes, Esq., only son of Charles Wilkes, Esq. of Ballincollig, near Cork; Mary, m. 1 May, 1817, to Robert Carleton, Esq., youngest son of John Carleton, Esq. of Woodside, near Cork, and Helena,) eight sons, Thomas, present representative; George, in holy orders; Nicholas, Robert, Richard, William, Noble, and Adam.

PARKHOUSE OF EASTFIELD LODGE.

Parkhouse, George, Esq. of Eastfield Lodge, co. Hants, m. 31 March, 1830, Fanny, dau. of Edmund Armstrong, Esq. of Gallen, King's Co., sister of Sir Andrew Armstrong, Bart., and niece of Lord Ashtown, (see Burke's Peerage and Baronetage,) and by her, who d. 29 Sept. 1839, has an only surviving dau.,

Elizabeth-Mary-Armstrong.

Mr. Parkhouse s. his father in 1814.

Lineage.

This is a junior branch of the Devonshire family of the same name.

Benjamin Parkhouse, merchant, who m. Honoria, dau. of Capt. Greenslade, and first cousin to the poet Gay,* had a son, Philip, and a dau., Alice, m. to John Pepper, Esq., of a Kentish family. The son,

Philip Parkhouse, had been educated and designed for holy orders, but the reverses of the fortune of his father frustrated this intention; and though he descended, in consequence, from that line of life for which his talents and disposition appeared to have made him eminently qualified, yet he did not drop from his parental sphere of association, in which he to the last retained high esteem as a most distinguished Greek scholar. He m. Hannah, dau. of Mr. William Richards, (of Welsh extraction,) by Ruth, his wife, dau. of James Bickham, Esq., whose wife's name was Escott, the name of the family estate in Somersetshire.† By this lady Mr. Parkhouse had three sons, Philip, d. s. p.; William, d. s. p.; and John, of whom presently; and two daus., Hannah,‡ m. to Captain Cowley, E. I. Co.'s military service; (this lady was the celebrated dramatic writer, authoress of the "Belle's Stratagem," "Who's the Dupe?" &c.;) and Mary, d. s. p. The youngest and only son to leave issue,

John Parkhouse, Esq., an accomplished classical and general scholar, m. Mary, dau. of the late Peter Corney, Esq., younger brother of Miles Corney, Esq., who inherited the landed estate as male representative of Sir Benjamin Rawlings, who d. unm. He (John Parkhouse) was secretary to the Carnatic commission at the period of his decease, which occurred 14 Nov. 1814, in the sixty-first year of his age. He had by his said wife, five sons and seven daus., I. William, who m. Mrs. Morphett, widow of an Indian gentleman, and is now deceased; II. George, now of Eastfield Lodge; III. John, who d. young; IV. Horatio, who d. young; V. Philip, ensign 2nd regt. Native Infantry, Bombay, d. at Camp, near Deesa, 7 Nov. 1824; VI. Sarah, d. young; II. Mary, m. to the Rev. E. Pritchett; III. Jane, d. young; IV. Philippa, d. young; V. Caroline; VI. Frances, d. young; and VII. Katharine.

* The family of Parkhouse having been remarkable in the last two or three generations for classical and literary attainments, caused frequent references to be made to their consanguinity with the poet Gay, and it is consequently not irrelevant to give the following extract from the poet's life:—"John Gay, an original poetic genius, was descended from an ancient family, which derived its name from Gilbert le Gay, of Hampton Gay, in Oxfordshire, who, in right of his wife, the dau. and heir of the family of Courtoyse, or Curtis, became possessed of the Lordship of Goldsworthy, in Devonshire, the ancient seat of the name of Gay for many generations."

Thomas Cowley, of the Inner Temple, barrister-at-law, d. in Spain.
Frances Cowley, m. to the Rev. David Brown, provost of the College of Fort William.
Elizabeth Cowley, d. young.

Arms, Crest, &c.—See Burke's Heraldic Illustrations, Plate XXIV.

Seat—Eastfield Lodge, Bittern, Hants.

I. Thomas, in holy orders, B.A. of St. John's College, Cambridge, rector of Westbury, co. Salop, and a magistrate of that shire, b. 5 May, 1805, m. 28 April, 1831, Anne-Penelope, dau. of the late Richard Topp, Esq. of Whitton. (See that family.)
II. Frederick, formerly capt. 54th regt., b. 29 June, 1806.
III. Robert, also sometime capt. 54th regt., b. 24 Sept. 1810, m. 30 Aug. 1832, Arabella-Lucinda, dau. of the late Lieut.-Colonel Samuel Reed, and has, 1. Thomas, b. 30 Nov. 1833; 2. Robert-William, b. 28 March, 1836; 1. Frances-Matilda; 2. Blanche-Minett; 3. Katherine-Isabel; 4. Alice-Gertrude.
IV. Henry, of St. Bees' Coll., Cumberland, b. 16 Aug. 1815, m. 11 Oct. 1839, Susanna-Hamilton, dau. of the late Thomas Dutton, Esq.,* and has issue, 1. Katherine-Susanna-Matilda; 2. Elizabeth De Ros.
V. Walter, d. young.

I. Katherine-Walter, m. 8 Jan. 1834, to the Rev. William Evans, B.D., rector of Shipston-on-Stour, a magistrate for Worcestershire, and late Fellow of Jesus College, Oxon, and has, 1. Constance-Katherine-Evans; 2. Katherine Evans.
II. Matilda-Elizabeth, d. in 1826, aged 18.

This gentleman, who was formerly one of the most eminent merchants of Liverpool, erected and resided in the house now occupied as the Royal Institution in that town. On retiring from business, in 1804, he purchased the estate of Lythwood, where he has since resided. He was many years a grand-juryman for the county of Salop. He is a connoisseur in paintings and prints, and has, at considerable labour and expense, formed an almost unique collection of British coins, exhibiting a connected series from the earliest period to the present time.

Lineage.

The surname of Parr is local, being derived from a manor in the parish of Prescot, co. Lancaster, of which the family were anciently lords.

Henry de Parr was witness to a deed of gift from Robert de Birch to John de Hulton, dated 12 Edw. II., A.D. 1318.† Next comes

Sir John de Parre, Knt. of Parre, living about 1350, who m. Matilda, dau. of Sir Richard de Leyborne, and was father of‡

* Lineally descended from Sir Piers Dutton, of Dutton, who built the new hall there in 1539. The Duttons of Dutton are now represented by the Duke of Hamilton and Brandon, who is also Baron Dutton in the Peerage of England. From a younger branch descends the present Lord Sherbourne.—(See Burke's Peerage, and the article Warburton of Arley, in this work.)

† The names of Robert de Par, seisne, Robert de Par, le puisne, and Henry de Par, occur among the gentlemen of Lancashire, then bearing arms, who gave evidence on the celebrated Scrope and Grosvenor controversy, 1386.

‡ From the same parent stock derived the Parrs of Backford, co. Chester, extinct 1582; the Parrs of Kempnall, represented by Starkie of Huntroyd (see that name); the Parrs of Rainford, now of Liverpool and Grappenhall (see those articles); the Parrs of Eccleston, of which was Richard Parr, rector of Eccleston, and Bishop of Man, who d. in 1643. (Refer to Burke's General Armory for their various armorial bearings.)

Sir William de Parre, of Parre, with whom Dugdale and Segar commence their pedigrees of the family; the latter styles him "descended from a race of knights." He m. in 1383, Elizabeth De Ros, dau. of Sir John De Ros, and granddau. and heir of Sir Thomas De Ros, Baron of Kendal,* and thus acquired the Kendal estates. Sir William, who was high in favour with Henry IV., d. 4 Oct. 1405. From his eldest son,

Sir John Parre, who m. Agnes, dau. of Sir Thomas Crophull, descended† the Parrs of Kendal, whose eventual representative, William Parr, Marquess of Northampton, (brother of Queen Katherine Parr,) d. s. p. in 1571. (See Burke's Extinct Peerage.)

From a younger son derived the Parrs of Parr, whose representative,

Bryan Parre, Esq. of Parre Hall, lord of the manor of Parre, d. in 1528, and was s. by his son, then aged twelve years,

Thomas Parre, Esq. of Parre Hall, lord of the manor of Parre, who m. Margaret, dau. of William Leyland, Esq. of Morley, by whom (who subsequently m. John Byrom, Esq. of Byrom,)‡ he had a numerous family.§ Dying in 1559, he was s. by his eldest son,

William Parr, Esq. of Parr Hall, lord of the manor of Parr, then aged nineteen. He m. Katherine, dau. of Thomas Eccleston, Esq. of Eccleston, and had several children. William Parr, who appears by the Duchy records to have been greatly involved in litigation with his stepfather, John Byrom and others, respecting the family property, was s. by his eldest son,

Bryan Parr, Esq. of Parr Hall, who m. Alice Twiss, and had one son, Henry, and three daus., Mary, Katherine, and Elizabeth. The son,

Henry Parr, Esq. of Parr, was, according to a pedigree in the College of Arms, twenty years old in 1621. Of his marriage or issue there is no certain information; the last of the family property had now been alienated, and the cadet branches, founded within the township by younger sons, gradually sunk into obscurity, and have all long since disappeared from the neighbourhood.‖ The branch of which we are now immediately to treat was founded by a descendant of one of the before-mentioned younger sons, who removed to the neighbouring port of Liverpool about the year 1600. The immediate ancestor,

Henry Parr, of Liverpool, living about 1660, had three sons, i. Henry; ii. Joseph,* who had a son, Henry, b. in 1703; iii. Ezekiel, who had also a son, Henry, b. in 1703. The eldest son,

Henry Parr, of Liverpool, b. about 1655, was a leading merchant in his day. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of ——, and had (with other issue, whose descendants are extinct)

i. John.
ii. Henry, d. in 1738, leaving a son, Nathaniel.
i. Anne, m. to Matthew Houghton, of Dublin.

Mr. Parr was buried at St. Nicholas' church, 26 Jan. 1725. His eldest son,

John Parr, of Liverpool, also m. a lady named Elizabeth, and had two sons, Henry, who d. s. p.; and John. He was buried at St. Nicholas, 17 Nov. 1761. His younger son,

John Parr, Esq. of Liverpool, and Elm House, West Derby, became eventually representative of the family. This gentleman, who was b. in 1734, m. Hannah, dau. of J. Anderton, Gent., of the ancient Lancashire family of that name, and by her (who d. 25 Jan. 1816, aged 77) had issue,

i. John, b. 16 Aug. 1766, m. Elizabeth, dau. of John Smalley, an eminent cotton manufacturer at Preston and Holywell, but d. s. p. 24 Nov. 1802. His wife predeceased him.
ii. William, of Wild Green, co. Warwick, b. 7 Oct. 1767, m. Catherine, dau. of Joseph Oughton, Esq.† of Sutton Coldfield, and d. in 1834, having had two sons, John, and William-Henry, who both attained majority, but d. unm., and two daus., Mary, d. unm., and Catherine-Amelia.
iii. James, of Parkfield, near Liverpool b. 6 Oct. 1768, d. 6 Jan. 1821, leaving issue by his wife, Rose,
  1. James, m. 6 June, 1833, Sarah, dau. of Nathaniel Haselwood, M.D., and has an only child, James-Haselwood, b. 20 Sept. 1836.
  2. John.
  1. Anne, m. to — Ewing, merchant.
  2. Elizabeth-Rose, m. to the Rev. William Badnall, M.A., incumbent of Wavertree, and chaplain to H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge.
  3. May.
iv. Thomas. v. Robert, d. unm.
i. Hannah, d. unm. 26 May, 1833.
ii. May, d. unm. 10 May, 1816.
iii. Elizabeth, m. to Thomas-Everard Cartwright, Esq., and d. leaving an only son,
  The Rev. Charles-Johnson Cartwright, of Brandon, co. Suffolk, m. 1 March, 1840, Emilie-Lydia, dau. of William Green, Esq. of Horsfield, near Bristol, and has issue.

Mr. Parr d. at Elm House, 15 March, 1798, and was buried in the family vault at St. Nicholas. His fourth and only surviving son is the present Thomas Parr, Esq. of Lythwood.

* For a full account of the families of Ros and Lancaster, feudal barons of Kendal, see Burke's Extinct Peerage. The marriage of Sir William Parre with Elizabeth de Ros is stated by Baker (Hist. North) to have been in 1390, which statement we have repeated in the General Armory. It is, however, palpably incorrect, as Sir William's son and heir was, according to the Inq. p. m., 22 years old in 6 Henry IV. (1404-5.)

† His son, Sir Thomas Parre, m. Alice, dau. of Sir Thomas Tunstall, and had (with daus.) two sons, Sir William Parre, continuator of the Kendal line, and Sir John Parre, sheriff of Westmoreland in 1462, whose grandson, John Parre, m. Margaret, dau. of Sir William Fielding, Knt., and had two sons,

i. John, ancestor of the Parrs of Derby, whose late representative, Captain Thomas Parr, R.N., d. without surviving male issue.
ii. ——, from whom the late Rev. Samuel Parr, LL.D., claimed to descend. (See Lynes of Tooley Park.)

‡ Through this connexion the manor of Parr appears to have passed to the Byroms, for in 12 James I., Henry Byrom (son of the above-mentioned John) d. seised of the manors of Parr and Byrom. Besides Parr Hall there is another ancient mansion, formerly called Laghooge, now Leafog, which remained in possession of the Parrs of Kendal to the time of their extinction. In 1592, Thomas Norris claimed, by virtue of a grant from the crown, the capital mansion and lands called Laghooge in Parr; the claim was resisted by William Parr and others, in right of William, Marquess of Northampton, deceased. This estate was the subject of further litigation in 1600, when Thurstan Parr was plaintiff, and Thomas Parr and others defendants, but the result does not appear by the Duchy records.

§ His younger sons, Bryan, Henry, and Thomas, established themselves within the township of Parr, where several of their descendants remained until the close of the 17th century, but are now extinct. Others removed to Liverpool about the commencement of the same century, and from one of them is descended the family we are treating of, as appears in the sequel.

‖ The will of William Parr, of Parr, yeoman, was proved at Chester so late as 1729, but it is not ascertained whether he was a descendant of this family.

* The family became Nonconformists about the time of the revolution, and, after the manner of the Puritans of those days, adopted the scriptural names of Joseph, Ezekiel, Nathaniel, &c.

† Mr. Oughton, who served as high-sheriff of Warwickshire in 1792, was descended from an ancient Warwickshire family, a branch of which was raised to the degree of Baronet in 1718. (See Burke's Extinct Baronetage.)

This name of Paton is written in old deeds, PATTON, and the family, which is from the south, is of considerable antiquity. It appears from a sealed parchment in possession of MR. PATON, that "in the six-and-twentieth year of HENRY VI., WILLIAM PATTEN, alias Waynflete, (from a town in Lancashire where he was born,) was son and heir of Richard Patten, and eldest brother of John, Dean of Chichester, and of Richard, who lived and died at Balsove, in Derbyshire." Lineage.

"The ancestors of the different families of the name of PATRICK, which now hold property in Ayrshire, (says Robertson,) were settled, and held situations about the monastery of Kilwinning, long prior to the Reformation." John Patrick attests, as a notary public, a charter connected with the church, dated 19 July, 1459, afterwards ratified in parliament; and William Patrick is a subscribing witness to a tack of the teinds of Dalry, granted by Alexander, commendator of Kilwinning, to John Hamilton, in 1549. The PATRICKS becoming early converts to the protestant religion, joined the reformers under the Earl of Glencairn; and some of them accompanying the expedition to the north of Ireland, under Hugh Montgomery, of Broadstane, afterwards Viscount Ardes, who, as expressed in his patent from JAMES VI., 'brought a colony of Scots into Clandebora and Ardes, towards the increase of the restored religion,' settled in that country, where their descendants still possess property, near Derry."

Lineage.

The family of PATTEN claims an ancestry coeval with the Conquest, but was not settled in Lancashire until the reign of HENRY VIII.

RICHARD PATTEN, living in 1119, son and heir of Richard Patten, or Patine, of Patten House, near Chelmsford, co. Essex, m. a dau. of the ancient Derbyshire family of Eyre, and had a son and successor,

I. WILLIAM PATTEN, alias WAYNFLETE, the illustrious founder of Magdalen College, Oxford, who was born at Waynflete, (whence, as was the custom of those times, he derived his surname,) but the exact period of his birth has never yet been ascertained. On the demise of Cardinal Beaufort, in 1447, he was advanced to the see of Winchester, which he held for the long space of 39 years; during which he amply justified the recommendation of the king, being distinguished for "piety, learning, and prudence." In Oct. 1456, he was constituted Lord High Chancellor in the room of Bourchier, Archbishop of Canterbury, and held the seals of office nearly four years; resigning in the month of July, 1460, about which time he accompanied the king to Northampton, and was with him a few days before the fatal battle near that place, in which the Lancastrians were defeated. Waynflete's attachment to HENRY's cause had been uniform and decided, yet his high character appears to have protected him. EDWARD IV. treated him not only with respect, but with some degree of magnanimity, as he twice issued a special pardon in his favour, and condescended to visit his newly-founded college at Oxford. The evening of the bishop's life was passed free from political strife and danger, and he lived to witness the quiet union of the rival roses, in the nuptials of Henry of Richmond and Elizabeth of York. This learned prelate, celebrated by historians for piety, temper, and humanity, d. 11 Aug. 1486, and was interred, with great funeral pomp, in Winchester cathedral, in a magnificent sepulchral chapel, which is kept in the finest preservation by the society of Magdalen College.
II. John Patten, alias Waynflete, dean of Chichester, there buried.

Lineage.

It is stated in the Harl. MS., No. 1933, (which agrees with the Harl. MSS. Nos. 1370, 1441,) that this family came into Wales, in the year 1283, with King EDWARD I., and it is said in Pennant's "Tour in Wales," (vol. ii. p. 173,) that they were brought over by Henry de Lacy, Earl of Lincoln. As Llewennie was within De Lacy's Lordship of Denbigh, and as a fee-farm rent was always paid to the crown, it is highly probable that the lands of Llewennie, which have been held by the Peakes for many centuries, and which are now possessed by their representative, were granted to their ancestor by that nobleman.

According to a pedigree in "Vincent's Wales," folio 138, in the College of Arms, which was compiled in the reign of Queen ELIZABETH,

RICHARD PEAKE, of Llewennie Green, was father of

THOMAS PEAKE, of Llewennie Green, who m. Katherine, dau. and heir of Richard Hilton, by the dau. and heir of John Newport, of Shropshire, by Lætitia, dau. and heir of William de Brierly; the which Richard Hilton was son of Robert Hilton, of Lancashire, by the dau. and heir of John de Pontefract. The said Thomas Peake had two sons, 1. RICHARD; 2. Thomas Peake, of Llewennie Green, m. and left a son, Richard, who, by Alicia, dau. and heir of Ralph Tottenhall, had a dau. and heir, Isabella Peake, m. to William Lloyd, alias Rossendall of Henllan.

RICHARD PEAKE, of Llewennie Green, (the eldest son of Thomas Peake and Katherine Hilton,) m. and was father of

RICHARD PEAKE, of Llewennie Green, who lived about 1470, m. Margaret, dau. of Sir John Donne, of Utkinton, Cheshire, and was by her father of

THOMAS PEAKE, who m. Jane, dau. and heir of William Clare, of Denbigh, and had a dau., m. to — Panton, co. Denbigh; and a son,

HENRY PEAKE, who s. his father, and m. Jane, dau. of Thomas Salisbury, of Maesmynna, by whom he had five daus., viz., 1. Jane, m. 1st, to Thomas Manved, 2ndly, to Richard Heaton, of Llewennie; 2. Margery, m. to Hugh ap Madock, of Dymerchian; 3. Lucie, m. to John ap Robert, of Llewennie; 4. Katherine, m. to Robert Wyn, of Denbigh; 5. Dowsia, m. to Robert Wynwey, of Denbigh; and one son,

HUGH PEAKE, of Llewennie, who was living in 1569, and dying in 1601, was buried at Henllan. He m. Agnes, dau. of William Vaughan, of Llanyvich, (who d. in 1618, and was buried with her husband,) and had four daus., viz., 1. Grace; 2. Lucy; 3. Jane, m. to William Thomas ap Jevan, of Llewennie Green; 4. Katherine; and a son,

THOMAS PEAKE, who m. (as appears by his marriage settlement, dated 13 Aug. 1593) Anne, sister of William Hanmer, Esq. of the Fenns, co. Flint. By her (who was living in 1631) he had three sons, viz., 1. HUGH; 2. Harry, of Mayneva, co. Flint, living in 1631; 3. William, living in 1631. The eldest son,

HUGH PEAKE, of Llewennie, who d. in 1666: he m. 1st, (settlement dated 10 Feb. 1639,) Katherine, dau. of John Vaughan, Esq. of Moulewig Park, co. Denbigh, and 2ndly, (settlement dated 23 Feb. 1646,) Katherine Davies, dau. of Dorothy Davies, of Ruthyn, widow. By her he had two sons, 1. HUGH, and 2. JOHN; and four daus., viz., 1. Dorothy; 2. PEIRSE OF BEDALE.

PEIRSE, MARIANNE, of Bedale, co. York, second but only unmarried dau. and co-heiress of the late Henry Peirse, Esq. of Bedale.

Lineage.

This family, which has, at one time or other, possessed a greater portion of the North Riding than perhaps any house of gentry ever seated in the district, descends from

PETER PEIRSE, who flourished during the reigns of EDWARD IV. and RICHARD III., and being attached to the house of York, fought at the battle of Bosworth Field in 1485, as a standard-bearer in the army of RICHARD III. Peter Peirse lost a leg on that occasion. His son,

THOMAS PEIRSE, resided at Bedale, co. York, temp. HENRY VIII., and marrying, had issue,

MARMADUKE PEIRSE, of Bedale, Esq., who was also concerned in that district of Yorkshire called "Cleveland." This gentleman m. Dorothy, dau. of Gale, of Scruton, co. York, whose family was afterwards rendered distinguished by Dr. Thomas Gale, Dean of York, and his learned sons, Roger and Samuel Gale, the antiquaries. Marmaduke Peirse d. in the year 1607, leaving, by Dorothy, his wife, who predeceased him in 1599,

HENRY PEIRSE, of Bedale, who is believed to have been a younger son. He lived temp. JAMES I., and m. Isabella, sister of Matthew Pinkney, Esq. of Richmond, co. York, of the house of Pinkney, seated at Silton, in the North Riding. By her he had,

I. JOHN, his heir.
II. Richard, b. in 1602, who was one of the gentlemen sewers of the chamber to King CHARLES I. in 1634.
I. Elizabeth, b. in 1591, who d. in 1644.
II. Dorothy, b. in 1596.

JOHN PEIRSE, Esq. of Bedale and London, elder son, b. in 1593, became, like his younger brother, a gentleman sewer of the chamber to CHARLES I.; and thus resident in London at the Visitation of 1634, recorded his pedigree therein. He m. Sarah, dau. of Peter Chamberlayne, and sister of the celebrated Peter Chamberlayne, M.D., the eccentric physician and author. According to an old family pedigree, this John Peirse was the purchaser of the manor of Bedale. He d. in 1658, having had by his said wife,

I. John, of Bedale, son and heir, who is entered in the pedigree, recorded 1634. He, however, d. unm., and Bedale descended to the issue of his younger brother.
II. RICHARD, of whom presently.

RICHARD PEIRSE, Esq., second son, entered in the pedigree of 1634, is the first of the family recorded to have resided on the manor of Hutton Bonville, in Birkby parish, of which he was lord. He m. Mary, dau. of Matthew Hutton, Esq. of Marske, co. York, (see that family,) by Barbara, his wife, eldest dau. of Sir Conyers D'Arcy, afterwards Lord D'Arcy, and sister of Conyers, first Earl of Holderness. This Richard Peirse purchased the manor of Thimbleby, in Osmotherley parish, in Allertonshire, of Sir Christopher Wandesford, in 1694; and he and Mary, his wife, are parties to deeds in 1700. He made his will 30 Nov. 1708, desiring burial in the chapel of Hutton Bonville, and devising his Northallerton estates to his grandson, Henry Peirse. His original will, now among the family muniments, contains a beautiful old seal of the Peirse arms, (azure, a ducal coronet, between three crossed-crosslets, fitchée, or,) impaling Chamberlayne, (gules, an inescutcheon, argent, between eight mullets in orle, or,) and thus evidently the seal of his father. He d. soon after, having had issue by his said wife,

I. John, b. in 1662, upon whom his father settled his estate at Lazenby. This gentleman m. in 1685, Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of Sir Henry Marwood, of Busby, in Yorkshire, Bart., high-sheriff of Yorkshire in 1675. He d. v. p. in 1694, having had issue,

SIR WILLIAM PENN, b. at Bristol in 1621, who, adopting the gallant profession of his father, became a distinguished naval officer, admiral of England, and was one of the commanders at the taking of Jamaica. Before he had reached his thirty-second year, he had gone through the various promotions of captain, rear-admiral of Ireland, vice-admiral of England, general in the first Dutch war, and commander-in-chief under the Duke of York, in the signal victory over the Dutch in 1665, on which occasion he was knighted. On his return he was sent to parliament by the borough of Weymouth; in 1660 he was made a commissioner of the admiralty and navy, governor of the fort and town of Kinsale, vice-admiral of Munster, and a member of that provincial council. He then took leave of the sea, but still continued his other employments till 1669, when, through bodily infirmities, he withdrew to Wanstead, in Essex, and there died in 1670. Although he was thus engaged, both under the parliament and king, he took no part in the civil war, but adhered to the duties of his profession. Besides the reputation of a great and patriotic officer, he acquired credit for having improved the navy in several important departments. He was the author of many little tracts on this subject, some of which are preserved in the British Museum. The monument erected to his memory, by his wife, in Redcliffe church, Bristol, contains a short account of his life and promotions. Sir William m. Margaret, dau. of John Jasper, of Rotterdam, and by her, who d. in 1681-2, left at his decease in 1670, a dau., Margaret, m. to Anthony Lowther, Esq. of Mask, in Yorkshire, and a son,

WILLIAM PENN, who was b. in the parish of St. Catherine, near the Tower of London, 14 Oct. 1644. This eminent man was the founder and legislator of Pennsylvania, in North America. In 1681, King CHARLES II., in consideration of the services of Mr. Penn's father, and several debts due to him from the crown at the period of his demise, granted to William Penn and his heirs the province lying on the west side of the river Delaware, in North America, which thence obtained the name of Pennslyvania. Mr. Penn immediately published a brief account of the province, proposing an easy purchase of land and good terms of settlement for such as were inclined to remove thither. A great number of purchasers came forward, and formed a company, called "The Free Society of Traders in Pennsylvania." Shortly after, the enlightened and beneficent proprietor sailed, to colonize his newly-acquired territories, with a band of persecuted Quakers, who followed his fortune; and having entered into a treaty with the Indian natives, founded the city of Philadelphia. He abolished negro slavery in his dominions, and established a code of laws for their internal government, which contributed much to the prosperity of the colony. On the accession of King JAMES II., Penn became a great favourite at court, and was one of the most zealous advisers of the measures for allowing liberty of conscience which then appeared. The Revolution placed the Quakers, in common with other dissenters, under the protection of the laws in the exercise of their religion, and Penn, having witnessed this favourable change in their situation, returned to America, where he was joyfully received, and found the affairs of his settlement in a prosperous condition. After residing in Pennsylvania a few years, he came home to negotiate some matters with the British government, relative to the commerce of the colony, whither he did not again return, dying at his seat at Ruscomb, in Berkshire, in 1718. Beside the tract entitled "No Cross No Crown," Penn was the author of "Primitive Christianity revived, in the Faith and Practice of the People called Quakers;" "A brief Account of the Rise and Progress of the Quakers;" "A Treatise on Oaths," &c. &c.

"William Penn, the great legislator of the Quakers, had," says Father O'Leary, "the success of a conqueror in establishing and defending his colony, among savage tribes, without ever drawing the sword; the goodness of the most benevolent rulers, in treating his subjects as his own children; and the tenderness of an universal father, who opened his arms to all mankind without distinction of sect or party. In his republic, it was not the religious creed, but personal merit, that entitled every member of society to the protection and emoluments of the state." With respect to the settlement, it has been supposed that, during the seventy years while William Penn's principles prevailed, or the Quakers had the principal share in the government, there was no spot on the globe where, number for number, there was so much virtue or so much true happiness as among the inhabitants of Pennsylvania: and that during the time, it exhibited (setting aside the difficulties of a new colony) a kind of little paradise upon earth. Hence the period from 1682 to 1754, with the same exception, has been denominated the golden age of Pennsylvania. Nor has this name been improperly bestowed upon it, if we examine into facts; for in a constitution where merit only was publicly rewarded, there must have been a constant growth of virtue, and, of course, happiness with it. In a constitution, also, where every man had free scope for his exertions, and the power of enjoying the fruits of his own labour, there must have been the constant opportunity of improving his temporal condition. William Penn m. 1st, Gulielma-Maria, dau. of Sir William Springett, and had by her a son,

WILLIAM, to whom his father left his estates in Ireland. This William was father of another WILLIAM PENN, whose dau., CHRISTIANA, marrying — Gaskill, Esq. of Gloucestershire, was mother of ALEXANDER-FORBES GASKILL, Esq. of Shannagarry, in the co. Cork.

He m. 2ndly, Hannah, dau. of Thomas Callowhill, of Bristol, and had by her three sons, viz.,

The second son,

MEILOR AP THOMAS, seated at Bryn, in the township of Halghton, parish of Hanmer, and county of Flint, whose son,

MADOC AP MEILIR, acquired the estate of Bychton, in the parish of Whiteford, Flintshire, by marriage with Alice, the dau. and heir of Philip of Fhychdyn, (that is, in English, Philip of Bychton,) son of Philip y Swydden Wyddel, or Philip, the Irish officer, one of the cavaliers who accompanied Gruffydd ap Cynan, Prince of Wales, from Ireland, to assist him in recovering his dominions, then usurped by Trahaern ap Caradog. The great and decisive victory obtained by Gruffydd over the usurper, (and in which Trahaern was slain,) on the mountains of Carno, co. Montgomery, anno 1077, the valour of Philip mainly achieved, and Gruffydd, thus reinstated in his principality, was not unmindful of his Milesian general, for he bestowed upon him great possessions, of which Bychton, in the parish of Whitford, formed a part. The arms borne by his son Philip, who was seated at Bychton, were, "Ar., three bars, wavy, az., the centre bar charged with three sheldrakes, of the first." These ensigns, acquired with the Bychton estate, the descendants of Madoc and Alice have quartered down to the present day. Iorwerth (or Edward), the son of Madoc and Alice, was father of Kenrick, the father of Ithel, the father of Tudur, whose son, DAVID AP TUDUR, first adopted the cognomen of PENNANT, and from him all of the name derive their descent. This surname is truly British, derived from Pen, a head, and Nant, a dingle, the ancient mansion of Bychton being seated at the head of a very considerable dingle on the old family estate. David m. 1st, Janet, dau. of David, of Trefcastle, in Tegengl, and had by her a son and two daus. He m. 2ndly, Anne, dau. of John Done, of Utkington, co. My loyal ancestor suffered there a long imprisonment. PERRY OF MOOR HALL.

PERRY, JOHN-WATLINGTON, Esq. of Moor Hall, and Jervis Hall, both in the co. Essex, b. 7 Dec. 1823; s. his father 15 Oct. 1833.

Lineage.

About the middle of the 17th century, the Perrys were settled in Devonshire, and an obscure tradition still prevails, that some of them had emigrated to that county from Limerick, in Ireland. Perhaps it is owing to the circumstance of being resident in the county of Devon, that one of them, devoting his genius and skill to naval architecture, acquired a name of considerable celebrity in that science, and obtained an appointment in the king's dockyard at Plymouth. He was afterwards removed to the royal dockyard at Woolwich. Here, his son, PHILIP, became connected in partnership with Sir Henry Johnson, then M.P. for Aldborough, in Suffolk, and the opulent owner of the well-known dockyard at Blackwall. This property was, in part, purchased by JOHN PERRY, Esq. of Walthamstow, co. Essex, who m. 1st, in 1737, Anne, dau. of Samuel Watlington, Esq. of Watlington House, Reading, co. Berks, and 2ndly, Miss Gibson, dau. of — Gibson, Esq. of Pinner, co. Savage, R.M., and Amelia) three sons, Richard, barrister-at-law; George, in holy orders; and Charles, also in orders, formerly fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Mr. Perry, a man of considerable talent, and of a bold and enterprising spirit, was educated at Harrow school, where he was cotemporary with the celebrated Sir William Jones, Chief Justice of Bengal, and with the late Dr. Anthony Hamilton, formerly Archdeacon of Colchester, and vicar of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields. To Mr. Perry the public is indebted for the origin and introduction of wet docks in the eastern part of the metropolis, which have afforded so much safety and protection to the commerce and shipping of the country. The first of this description, called the Brunswick Dock, was a spacious wet dock, planned and excavated on his own estate, and entirely at his own expense, in the year 1789. It was completed in little more than twelve months from the commencement, and, when opened, was capable of containing East Indiamen and other vessels to the number of eighty. On the south side, and towards the river, is a magnificent quay, which measures, from east to west, eleven hundred feet. Mr. Perry d. 7 Nov. 1810, and was s. by his son,

THOMAS PERRY, Esq. of Moor Hall, who had been for some time in the E. I. Co.'s civil service, Bengal. Lineage.

This family has been, for several centuries, resident and possessed of lands in the West of England. According to Risdon, and other antiquaries, the Lady Alice Pole, in the reign of HENRY III., gave the manor and castle of Compton, in Devonshire, "to one of the family of Peter, whose posterity afterwards took the name of the place." Another branch settled at Torr-Newton, in the adjacent parish of Torr-Brian,* of which was

JOHN PETER, who lived in the reigns of RICHARD II. and HENRY IV., and who, by his wife, Alice, left issue, two sons,

I. JOHN, his successor.

JOHN PETER, the elder brother, inherited his father's estates in Devonshire, and left issue, by his wife, a son, named

WILLIAM PETER, who (as it appears from an inquisition, taken in the 14th of EDWARD IV.) was seised of Torr-Newton, Bakebeare, Milton, and other lands, in the cos. of Devon, Dorset, and Hants, as heir of his father and uncle, John and Nicholas Peter aforesaid, and was at that time 24 years of age. By his wife, Joan, he had several children, among whom were

I. John, who inherited Torr-Newton, and other estates in Devonshire, and who, by Alice, his wife, dau. of John Collins, Esq. of Woodlands, in the same co., was father of Sir William Peter, or Petre, principal secretary of state in the reigns of HENRY VIII., EDWARD VI., MARY, and ELIZABETH, and ancestor of the Lords Petre, of Writtle, co. Essex.
II. WILLIAM, which

WILLIAM PETER, the younger son, s. to his father's estates in Dorsetshire and Hants, and further increased his patrimony by his marriage with Joan, only dau. and heiress of Sir Roger Arundel, of Calwoodly, co. Devon, by which lady he had issue three sons,

This

JOHN PETER resided at Bowlay, near Exeter, and was one of the representatives of that city in the first parliament of PHILIP and MARY. He m. his cousin, Wilmot, dau. of John Peter, Esq. of Torr Newton, and sister of Sir William Peter, secretary of state, and d. in 1579, at a very advanced age, leaving a numerous progeny of sons and daus., amongst whom were,

I. John, who was M.P. for Dartmouth in the first parliament of PHILIP and MARY, (the same in which his father represented Exeter,) and d. s. p. in the lifetime of his father.

In the 13th of ELIZABETH, he was M.P. for Fowey, in the 14th for Penryn, and in the 28th of the same reign, for Dartmouth. He m. Thomasine, dau. of John Kestell, of Kestell, co. Cornwall, Esq., and left issue two sons,

The elder son,

HENRY PETER, M.P. for Fowey in the first parliament of JAMES I., m. in 1609, Deborah, dau. of John Treffry, Esq. of Place, a lineal descendant of Sir John de Treffry, who, for his gallant services in France, particularly at Crecy and Poictiers, was created Knight Banneret by the Black Prince, and permitted, by EDWARD III., to quarter the royal lilies of France alternately with the arms of his own family. Henry Peter d. in 1619, leaving issue by his said wife, Deborah,

THOMAS PETER, b. in 1610, who m. in 1632, Elizabeth, only dau. and heiress of Henry Michell, Esq. of Harlyn, co. Cornwall, which place had been acquired by the Michells in the reign of HENRY VII., in marriage with the heiress of Tregoyes, a family which (according to Carew) ranked among the English nobility at the time of the Conquest. Having been an active royalist in the civil wars between CHARLES and his parliament, Thomas Peter was, for a long time, imprisoned by CROMWELL, but obtained his release on the 2nd of Feb. 1653, through the influence of his maternal kinsman, the celebrated Hugh Peters,† who was chaplain to the Protector. He d. in 1675, leaving issue three sons and a dau., the wife of Henry Vincent, Esq. His eldest son and successor,

GREGORY PETER, Esq. of Harlyn,‡ was high-sheriff of the co. of Cornwall, in the last year of King WILLIAM'S, and the first of Queen ANNE'S reign. * Another branch, settled in the same parish, was denominated Fitz-Peter, of which was Nicholas Fitz-Peter, M.P. for Launceston in the reign of EDWARD III. The name seems to have been spelt in various ways, as Peter, Peeter, Petere, Fitz-Peter, &c. In the oldest editions of Holinshed, Roger Ascham, and Spenser, it is spelt Peter.

† Bowhay descended from father to son, down to the great-grandson of Otho, John Peter, Esq., who left an only dau., Frances, m. to Sir Allen Apsley, brother of Lucy, wife of Colonel Hutchinson. (See her Life of COL. HUTCHINSON.) She had issue a son and a dau., viz.,

Frances, who m. to Sir Benjamin Bathurst, whose descendant, the present
Earl of Bathurst, now represents the Bowhay branch of the Peter family.

Upon Otho Peter (father of the last male heir, who m. Frances, dau. of Thomas Southcote, Esq.) the following curious epitaph is to be seen, on a monument to the right of the communion-table, in Exminster Church, near Exeter:—

"In sempiternam memoriam OTHONIS PETER, armigeri, mæstissimus ejus Filius hoc monumentum p. p. p.
"Conditur hâc Petrâ, pietatis Petra, Petræus;

† Hugh Peters (of a family which had been driven from Antwerp on account of its religion) was the son of Thomas-Dykewood Peters, a merchant of Fowey, by Martha, dau. of John Treffry, Esq. of Place. The name of Peters was first assumed by Thomas Dykewood, the grandfather of Hugh. The Rev. Charles Peters, the learned commentator on the Book of Job, and the able antagonist of Bishop Warburton, was of this family.

‡ There is a curious superstition attached to this house, which has descended through ages, and is still most devoutly attested and believed by the ancient domestics of the family, viz., that a white dove always makes her appearance and flutters round the windows just before the death of any member of the family. A similar tale is mentioned by Howell in his "Familiar Letters," regarding the Oxenham family, of Devonshire; and see Sir Walter Scott's "Lady of the Lake," Note H.

I. Anarawd, king of North Wales, ancestor of the SOVEREIGNS OF NORTH WALES, from whom derived the WYNNS OF GWYDYR, &c. (See that name under WILLIAMS-WYNN OF LLANGEDWIN.)
II. Cadelh, king of South Wales, progenitor of the SOVEREIGNS OF SOUTH WALES.
III. Mervyn, king of Powys, ancestor of the SOVEREIGNS OF POWYS, from whom descended their representative, OWEN GLENDOWER, the HUGHES'S OF GWERCLAS, BARONS OF KYMMER-YN-EDEIRNION, (see that name,) DAVIES'S OF GWYSANEY, (see that name under COOKE OF OWSTON,) KYNASTONS OF HARDWICK, BARTS., (see BURKE'S Peerage,) VAUGHANS OF NANNAU, BARTS., &c., (Ibid.)
IV. TUDWAL.

TUDWAL, the fourth son, AP RHODRI MAWR, was called Tudwal gloff, or the lame, having been wounded in the knee in the battle fought against the Saxons and Danes, near Conway, and which is recorded in Welsh history as "Dial Rodri," or the "Revenge of Roderick;" it was fought in the year 878; and the Saxons and Danes being defeated, the death of Roderick was assumed to be avenged, and thus the event became recorded with the above appellation.

Eighth in descent from Tudwal gloff was,

CADIVOR AP DYFNWAL, Lord of Castel Howel, who lived temp. HENRY I. of England, and acquired martial distinction. In the eleventh year of the reign of HEN. II., Cadivor, at the head of a detachment of the forces of Prince Rhys, took, by escalade, the castle of Cardigan, then held by the Earl of Clare, and a body of Flemings, for the English monarch. For this service he was rewarded by the grant of various extensive tracts of land in Cardiganshire, the gift of Prince Rhys, who also bestowed upon him his daughter in marriage; and his descendants have, to the present day, ranked among the principal landed proprietors and gentry of Cardiganshire. Lineally descended from Cadivor ap Dyfnwal is the family of whom we are about to treat, as also many others in Cardiganshire, Caermarthenshire, and Pembrokeshire. For the bravery displayed by him in the assault and taking of Cardigan Castle, Cadivor received from Prince Rhys a grant of the following arms: "Sa., a spear's head, arg., imbrued, gu., between three scaling-ladders of the second, (two and one;) on a chief of the third, a castle, triple-towered, ppr." His father, Thomas March, Esq., who d. in London, in the year 1754, m. Jane, fourth dau. of Edward Lisle, Esq. of Crux Easton, Wilts, and Moyles Court, Hants, by Mary, only dau. of Sir Ambrose Phillipps, of Garendon. His uncle, John March, Esq. of Willesly Park, co. Cambridge, had two daus., coheiresses,

I. Teresa, m. to Thomas Dashwood, Esq. of Well, co. Lincoln, by whom she had issue, 1. Bateman Dashwood, who inherited Well; 2. Harriett Dashwood, m. to the Earl of Malmesbury, d. in 1816, and left issue; and 3. Catherine Dashwood.
II. Elizabeth, m. to Richard Howard, fourth Earl of Effingham, with whom the earldom became extinct, 11 Dec. 1816, for want of issue.

‡ Charles Lisle, Esq. of Moyles Court, co. Hants, was the representative of a most noble and ancient family, who were formerly barons of England, by the title of Lords Lisle, of the Isle of Wight, which dignity has been in abeyance since the reign of Edward IV. Reginald Lisle was one of the early benefactors of Garendon Abbey, founded in 1133, by Robert Bossu, the good Earl of Leicester, as he was surnamed, for the Cistercian or White Monks, who follow the rule of St. Benedict without mitigation, and which Abbey was destroyed in 1541 by Henry VIII. That monarch gave it, with the lands belonging, to Thomas, Earl of Rutland, who sold it to the Duke of Buckingham, and from him it was purchased by Sir Ambrose Phillipps, in 1689, in which family it has remained ever since. Bossu, Earl of Leicester, afterwards became a monk in Garendon Abbey, where he ended his days. Of this family of Lisle we have several records in Camden's Britannia. The great Sir John Lisle, one of the twelve first knights of the garter, in the reign of Edward III., was Lord High Admiral of England, and fought in the holy wars, in which he greatly distinguished himself. He was buried in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and in St. George's Hall his arms are emblazoned. Of this family also was John Lisle, Esq., one of Cromwell's lords, and commissioner of his great seal, the sacrifice of whose widow by the infamous Judge Jefferies, in 1668, has been universally and justly reprobated. At the age of eighty, she was tried, convicted, and executed at Winchester, for secreting in her house two dissenting ministers, who took refuge there after the defeat of the Duke of Monmouth's little army at Sedgemoor, co. Somerset. By this lady, who was co-heiress of Sir White Beconfawe, Knt., Moyles Court, co. Hants, was brought in marriage to the Lisles in 1636.

v. Catherine-March, m. 1st, to the Hon. Edward Cowper, second son of Earl Cowper; and 2ndly, to the Rev. J. Hamilton, rector of Shepeshed. She d. without issue in Jan. 1830.

Mr. Phillipps, who was deputy-lieut. for the co. Leicester, and served as high-sheriff for the same county in 1801, d. in 1817, and was s. by his eldest son, the present CHARLES-MARCH PHILLIPPS, Esq. of Garendon.

Lineage.

The constant tradition of this family has been, that they descend from a younger branch of the house of Picton, but after much laborious investigation, nothing has been ascertained capable of throwing any light on the point in question. That they are of Welsh origin is, however, certain, it having been proved, by family evidences still in existence, that they were possessed of lands in the parish of Disserth, in Radnorshire, about the middle of the reign of ELIZABETH, whence, later in the same reign, they removed into Herefordshire, still retaining possession of the Radnorshire property till the middle of the last century, when the estates called Upper and Lower Kilgainvin, in that parish, were disposed of, in 1753, by Thomas Phillipps, Esq. The first settler in Herefordshire,

OWEN PHILLIPS, of the city of Hereford, younger brother of John Phillips, of Kilgainvin, in the parish of Disserth, Radnorshire, held lands in Disserth about the year 1595. He m. Joane — (whose will, dated 19 April, 1639, was proved 16 July, 1641,) and had, with other issue,* a son,

Lineage.

RICHARD PIGOTT, "of Cheshire," presumed to have been of the family of Pigott of Butler, in that county, and to have been descended from Gilbert, lord of Broxton, living temp. Conquestoris, m. the dau. and co-heiress of Sir Richard de Peshale, of Chetwynd, co. Salop, and with her obtained that fine estate. His grandson,

ROBERT PIGOTT, of Chetwynd, was sheriff of Shropshire in 1517, and he (as also did several of his descendants) bore for arms, azure, a chevron, between three mullets, or, on a chief, ermine, three fusils, sable. The chevron and mullets were borne by the Peshales of Chetwynd, in consequence of the marriage of Sir Richard de Peshale, sheriff of Shropshire, in 1333, with Joan, dau. and heir of Reginald, son of Sir John de Chetwynd, by which marriage the Chetwynd estate was obtained by the Peshale family. Robert Pigott, Esq., m. Margaret, dau. of Sir John Blunt, Knt. of Kinlet, by whom he had issue,

THOMAS PIGOTT, Esq. of Chetwynd, whose son,

ROBERT PIGOTT, Esq. of Chetwynd, was sheriff of Shropshire in 1574. By Elizabeth, his wife, dau. of William Gatacre, Esq. of Gatacre, he had numerous issue, and was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS PIGOTT, Esq. of Chetwynd, sheriff of Shropshire in 1615, who m. Dorothy, dau. of Thomas Eyton, Esq. of Eyton, and dying in 1620, was s. by his son,

WALTER PIGOTT, Esq. of Chetwynd, sheriff of Shropshire in 1624, who m. Katharine, dau. of Sir Richard Leveson, Knt., and had a son,

THOMAS PIGOTT, Esq. of Chetwynd, who m. Anne, dau. of Ralph Sneyd, Esq. of Keele, co. Stafford, and dying in 1665, was s. by his son,

WALTER PIGOTT, Esq. of Chetwynd, who m. Anne, dau. of Sir John Dryden, Bart. of Canons Ashby, co. Northampton, and dying in 1669, was s. by his eldest son,

ROBERT PIGOTT, Esq. of Chetwynd, sheriff of Shropshire in 1697, who m. Frances, dau. of William Ward, Esq. of Willingsworth, co. Stafford, (brother of Edward, Lord Dudley and Ward,) by whom he had, with two daus., Honor, m. to John Harvey, Esq.; and Ann, m. to Richard Lyster, Esq. of Rowton, co. Salop, six sons, of whom the fourth, WILLIAM, was ancestor of the PIGOTTS OF DODDERSHALL, to which article refer. The eldest son,

ROBERT PIGOTT, Esq. of Chetwynd Park, co. Salop, and of Chesterton Hall, co. Huntingdon, b. 21 Nov. 1699, m. 1st, Diana, dau. and co-heir of Richard Rocke, Esq. of Shrewsbury, but had no issue. He m. 2ndly, Anne, dau. of — Peers, Esq. of Criggion, co. Montgomery, by whom he had three sons and four daus., of whom the youngest, Rebecca, m. John Mytton, Esq. of Halston. The date of Mr. Pigott's death is known by the remarkable wager, recorded in Burrows' Reports, under the title of "The Earl of March versus Pigott," in which Lord Mansfield decided, that the impossibility of a contingency is no bar to its becoming the subject of a wager, provided the impossibility is unknown to both the parties at the time of laying it. The case was this: Mr. R. Pigott and Mr. Codrington agreed to run their fathers' lives one against the other; Sir William Codrington being a little turned of fifty, Mr. Pigott, senior, upwards of seventy; but the latter was already dead. He died in Shropshire, (150 miles from London,) at two o'clock in the morning of the day on which the bet was made at Newmarket, after dinner. This circumstance was at the time unknown to, and not even suspected by, either party; but hence Mr. Pigott was induced to resist payment of the five hundred guineas, for which the wager was laid; and Lord March, afterwards the well-known Duke of Queensberry, who had taken Mr. Codrington's bet, was compelled to bring his action, in which he succeeded. Dying thus, in May, 1770, Mr. Pigott was s. at Chetwynd by his eldest son,

ROBERT PIGOTT, Esq., sheriff for Shropshire in 1774, soon after which, becoming alarmed (as it is said) at the gloomy aspect of affairs in this country, consequent upon the commencement of the American war, he sold the ancient inheritance of Chetwynd, which had been in his name for twelve generations, and hastened to rescue seventy thousand pounds, the inadequate consideration which he had received for it, from his anticipated wreck of the kingdom, by retiring to the Continent, and there lost a considerable part of this property, on the failure of those to whom he had entrusted it. He lived for some time at Geneva, married abroad, and had a son, who died before him. His own death happened at Toulouse, on the 7th July, 1794. His uncle,
